The new Queen of Pop headlines All Points East
Fiery Power

There's nothing quite like the depth and intensity that chilli brings to any dish. Our chilli flakes are sourced from cayenne peppers grown in India for an authentic taste. We use the perfect ratio of red flakes and yellow seeds to create an unmistakably powerful flavour that gives every dish a deep, spicy kick.
Hit a Dome run
The Crystal Maze Live Experience has moved to the West End. We try to make our escape from its new maze in the Trocadero

Dalston Superstore is ten
Party time! Well-known regulars wish the beloved Hackney LGBT+ venue a very happy birthday

Lush libations
From London’s largest beer garden to a ‘living bar’ (below) – we get the drinks in at our leafiest watering holes

‘Amazing Grace’
Rescued footage of the awesome Aretha Franklin finally makes it to the big screen. It’s glorious. Five stars

Tom yum yum!
Check out six of the city’s best Thai restaurants
This week, we catch up with super-intriguing French dancing queen Chris ahead of her huge gig headlining All Points East. A performer whose identity is as fluid as her moves, she proves that pop doesn’t have to be manufactured and boring.

And, she tells us, her career was inspired by Time Out! She followed one of our listings to iconic Soho club Madame Jojo’s and fell in with a bunch of friendly drag queens. So, why not pick a recommendation this week and follow it to somewhere surprising? We have robot dogs (p64), Mexican wrestlers (p42) and a birthday bash for a legendary nightclub (p51).

Who knows where they might lead you?

Comment of the Week

In our online feature covering the most beautiful libraries in the capital, we suggested you leave your phones at home. Cue wrist-slap...

‘As a librarian I feel I must state it’s not either or. Pretty much everyone who comes into our library has a phone on them and that’s just fine. Libraries are about information, which can be gathered more and more via electronic means. And libraries are great for free wi-fi!’

Victoria EC via Facebook

You Said It

What you’ve been rating and hating online

Aperol: The Sequel. Last year, Aperol put on a pop-up with a massive orange canal and you all flipped out. It’s coming back in late May and this time there’ll be a Venice-inspired lido – with a waterfall (don’t drink any liquid that’s not in a glass)! Still popular? Well, 3,200() comments tell the story. One reader was excited but is staying on dry land. Another has had enough of our nonsense.

‘OMG I love Aperol Spritz! Can’t say I’d want to bathe in it, though.’

Julie A via Facebook

‘Why do the British have to turn all food and drink into fun? You are not kids, show some respect!’

Myriam B via Facebook

Train enthusiasts got massively into our video of the Royal Windsor Steam Express, which sets off from Waterloo. Who wouldn’t want a fab dinner while riding through the countryside? And it’s carbon-neutral! One reader was so happy she didn’t even want to be fed.

‘I’d be happy with a bag of sarnies to get to ride on that beauty.’

Helen M via Facebook

There is a beach in Fulham. Yes, for real. So make like you’re in Cancun, but remember to keep your pants on: it’s not that kind of beach.

‘Fifteen degrees with a bit of sun and y’all still be topless.’

Ranu R via Facebook

Caroline McGinn
Global Editor-in-Chief
@carolinemcginn
GET REWARDED with an Amazon Echo Dot on us.
Offer ends 30 June.

Plus, get an AMAZON SMART PLUG TOO

Does Alexa speak Dachshund?

And get fitness and nutrition tips from the Alexa Vitality Skill.

New member offer until 30 June, available with certain Vitality plans.

VitalityHealth: POSITIVELY DIFFERENT HEALTH INSURANCE

Offer applies to new Personal Healthcare plans. Offer runs 22.04.2019 to 30.06.2019 inclusive and is not sponsored or endorsed by Amazon. To be eligible, an online Health Review should be completed and the first premium payment must be made. Minimum monthly premiums and further terms and conditions apply. VitalityHealth is a trading name of Vitality Corporate Services Limited which is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority.
This’ll make you a morning person.

COSTA
COFFEE
City life

Edited by James Manning
@timeoutlondon

It’s Time Out Market month!

THIS THURSDAY, the much-anticipated Time Out Market will open its doors in Miami. Just like the magazine you’re holding, it’s a place where you’ll find the best of the city – food served by Miami’s best chefs, cocktails by its greatest bartenders and art and culture by its brightest talents – curated by our expert local editors. Hot on Miami’s heels, Time Out Markets in Boston and New York will open this spring. (Time Out Market London Waterloo is due in 2021!) Oh, and this month also marks five years since the original Time Out Market Lisbon opened, shaking up the Portuguese capital’s food scene and becoming the most popular tourist attraction in the country. So we’re in the mood to celebrate – and how better than with the best food and drink known to humanity? This May, join us online for Time Out Market Month, when we’ll be celebrating great eats in the spirit of Time Out Market’s mission to open fine dining to everyone. Your table awaits.

James Manning

Follow #TimeOutMarketMonth for delicious food inspo, and learn more at www.timeout.com/time-out-market.

THE ESSENTIALS

Three things you have to do this week

Do this

Need a screen break? Have some old-fashioned family fun as the long-running (and free) Covent Garden May Fayre and Puppet Festival celebrates Mr Punch’s birthday this Sunday.

Eat this

Dishoom’s bacon naan is a London breakfast classic, but now mornings at the Indian joint are even better: the new breakfast menu includes a double bacon naan as well as a vegan take. Joy!

See this

Keith Waterhouse’s ‘Jeffrey Bernard Is Unwell’ is being staged for the first time in the very pub the play is set in: the under-threat Coach & Horses. Raise a pint to a Soho legend from Tuesday.

Discover more cool things to do at timeout.com/news
OVER THE LAST decade or so, London has seen the unlikely spread of feral ring-necked parakeets: a species of small parrot whose native range extends across South Asia and Central Africa. First sighted in Dulwich in the 1890s, and for a long time a quirky feature of Kingston-upon-Thames, the flocks have now colonised green spaces the length and breadth of the capital, from Croydon to Crouch End.

Accustomed in their native range to the Himalayan foothills, they are unruffled by mild English winters. The last official roost count, in 2012, recorded 32,000 parakeets in London. Now there must be many, many more. As extraordinary as it seems, these bright birds are starting to become one of the most commonly seen—and heard—creatures in the city. And here’s the even more extraordinary thing: no one knows how they got here.

Theories abound. Did Jimi Hendrix release a breeding pair on Carnaby Street in 1968? Did they escape from the set of the film ‘The African Queen’ in 1951? Did they make their bid for freedom during the Great Storm of 1987? Sadly, the likeliest theory is the dullest: that they escaped from multiple cages, and—being a smart, sociable and highly adaptable species—lost no time in flocking together and finding nesting sites. But whatever the truth behind their expansion, London’s parakeets are well on their way to becoming a ubiquitous feature of city life.

Nick Hunt

‘The Parakeeting of London: An Adventure in Gonzo Ornithology’ by Nick Hunt and Tim Mitchell is published by Paradise Road.

Why are there parakeets in London?

SHOP LIKE AN ICON

With up to 60% off premium fashion and lifestyle brands, you can afford to get that superstar feeling every day.

GANT | GUESS | LEVI’S | OSPREY LONDON | SCOTCH & SODA | TED BAKER – AND MORE
DISCOVER THE NEW SHARED OWNERSHIP COLLECTION ONE STOP FROM STRATFORD

STUDIO, 1, 2 & 3 BEDROOM APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

SHARE PRICES FROM £98,000*

DISCOVER THE NEW SHARED OWNERSHIP COLLECTION ONE STOP FROM STRATFORD
STUDIO, 1, 2 & 3 BEDROOM APARTMENTS AVAILABLE

BOOK YOUR VIEWING
peabodysales.co.uk/motion
020 3369 0482

*Studio prices starting from £98,000 (a 35% share of the full market value, £280,000). Additional affordability and eligibility criteria may apply. Image is an indicative computer generated artist impression and is for guidance purposes only. Prices correct at time of print.
City life

THINGS YOU ONLY KNOW IF YOU’RE A...

Gallery assistant

Adeola Ajediti, 55

Picasso doesn’t come up in the job interview

‘I knew nothing about art when I started at Tate Modern. Back then, I was willing to do anything to get off benefits. But in 18 years I have learned so much, and now I have the confidence to tell a visitor, “We don’t have anything by Rachel Whiteread just now, but can I show you a Barbara Hepworth instead?”’

Kids behave better than some adults – but teenagers are the worst

‘Small children are often the Tate’s best-behaved visitors. They just seem to love learning as much as they can in here. On the other hand, big groups of foreign students are much more troublesome. You’ll see them playing on the escalators or running around. Often their teachers just aren’t controlling them, and there’s not a lot I can do about that.’

Security guards play a bigger role in art galleries these days

‘We need more security staff in London galleries than we did before, but it means that my job has got more interesting. Before, I was stuck in just one room, stopping people from doing this or that. Now I spend my day roaming free in the building and showing visitors all the things they can do.’

Diplomacy is as crucial as art history

‘What we call “patrolling” involves a lot of mind-reading. You learn the tell-tale gestures and body language of a person who’s just about to try and touch an artwork. If a visitor does get upset at being called out, you just have to step away and avoid making them angrier – especially if they suddenly have something priceless in their hands.’

---

Overheard something weird? Tweet us #wordonthestreet @timeoutlondon

---

‘He’s so sheltered he’s never trimmed his pubes.’

‘It’s like an orgy that I’m not enjoying.’

‘I was in Tesco at 5am with two legs of lamb, Nutella, mini muffins, eggs and smoked mackerel.’

‘He’s your age, but ten years older.’

‘You can make so many things from bread. It’s the oblong of opportunity.’

‘No, just don’t want chewing gum up my arse!’

‘I’m not being funny, but how on earth do you milk an almond?’

‘Every time I see a rock pool, I think: Charlie Dimmock.’

‘You can’t eat oysters – they’re really dangerous. That’s what killed Michael Winner.’

---

‘Interview by James FitzGerald’
FLY TO FLING

LONDON GATWICK TO TORONTO
FROM £185 EACH WAY BASED ON A RETURN FARE

SALE ENDS 21 MAY ba.com/gatwick

INCREDIBLE IS WITHIN REACH

Limited availability. Prices are available each way based on a return 'Economy Basic' World Traveller fare, from London Gatwick only, and include taxes, fees and charges. Fare excludes checked baggage. Correct as of 1 May 2019 but are subject to change at any time. Departing from London Gatwick to Toronto (Pearson) on select dates between 1 May 2019 – 16 June 2019 and 1 September 2019 – 29 September 2019. See ba.com/gatwick for details.
City life

THEN AND NOW

Bishopsgate

Soon after Brown’s photo, the Broadgate office development swallowed up the whole west side of Bishopsgate. As Shoreditch (just to the north) became a hub for fashion, tech and silly haircuts, skyscrapers such as the Principal Tower joined the street’s skyline. Now Broadgate owner British Land is redeveloping neighbouring Norton Folgate too, with the much-loved Water Poet pub recently going the way of The Hand Pump – and all the other storied places lost to London’s shifting sands.

AS A TUBE driver in the late ‘80s, Tim Brown had a front-row seat as east London was remodelled from post-industrial backwater to Thatcherite boom town. His Kodachrome photographs, unpublished for 20 years, document the city on the brink of transformation. This picture of Bishopsgate, just north of Liverpool Street station, shows two remaining Victorian and Edwardian buildings (including The Hand Pump pub) on the verge of demolition, surrounded by cranes heralding a new era for the yuppified City of London.

James Manning

THE VIEW FROM YOU

What Time Out readers have been Instagramming this week

‘The ruins of St Dunstan-in-the-East have become a splendid garden.’

@prove

‘When it lines up juuuuust right...’

@bazzinghphotos

‘I’d been meaning to check out The Churchill Arms – I love the outside!’

@wolf.willis

‘Who needs a sugar daddy when you have Daddy Bao?’

@jessandcaitlin_
TAKE ON THE DAY

ARLA SKYR ICELANDIC STYLE YOGURT
FREE LONDON

Put your money away! Here are the week’s best free events

BRAZILIAN!
‘Somos Brasil’

Get up close and personal with more than 100 Brazilian citizens at this exhibition at the Embassy of Brazil. Showcasing an extensive project by Marcus Lyon, ‘Somos Brasil’ (translation: ‘We are Brazil’) is more than just photography. If you scan the images with your phone, you can hear each person’s story in their own words and see their DNA map.

YES, WE CAN
Camden Town Brewery giveaway

To celebrate the launch of its Week Nite Any Day Lager, Camden Town Brewery is handing out 1,500 free cans from its Camden bar for a 30-minute frenzy at 5pm tomorrow. Hop to it!

THE SKY’S THE LIMIT
Streatham Common Kite Day

See the skies of south London filled with colourful kites at this annual event. You can stick to watching the professionals (yes, there are pro kite flyers) or FYO (that’s fly your own, obviously).

GO NUTS
National Doughnut Week

Need an afternoon sugar hit? You’re in luck. To celebrate National Doughnut Week, Whole Foods Market Kensington is giving away 1,000 free doughnuts from 3pm on Monday. Sweet!

PAWS FOR THOUGHT
Cabbages & Frocks Dog Day Afternoon

Try out doga, watch a man-and-dog dance performance and catch loads of cute pups battle it out in competitions including ‘waggy tail’ and ‘a bit of ruff’.

→ St Marylebone Parish Church Grounds. Baker St. Sat May 11.

DON’T MISS

99 problems? Try 101 things to do at timeout.com/thingstodo
WE COULD SHOW
A HAND MODEL
GENTLY CRADLING OUR BEANS
TO EMPHASISE
PASSION & CARE

But we don’t

Great tasting coffee, simple
It’s eight months since Christine And The Queens became Chris. Isabelle Aron meets the endlessly reinventive pop star as she gears up to play her biggest ever London show.
Are we fuckable or not? That’s the big question.’ Chris, formerly Christine And The Queens, is eating breakfast in the Riding House Café, off Oxford Street, and talking about the reaction she got when she unveiled her new identity last September. She had lost 16 characters from her name and gained a change of sound from synth-pop to something bolder, funkier, more in-your-face. The first track of her new album, ‘Chris’, opened with a joyful scream.

All anyone wanted to talk about, though? How she’d cut her long brown hair into a short crop. ‘I’m like: don’t you want to ask me if I wrote the track first? And the question of fuckability later?’ she says. Dramatic pause. ‘Or never.’

The 30-year-old singer, writer and producer from Nantes is known for creating music that makes you want to dance – whether it’s an ethereally melancholy ballad or a G-funk-inspired banger. Her music’s multilingual too, mixing French and English. There’s even some (rude) Spanish words on that self-titled record, which is laced with stories of tumultuous desire.

She is also known for reinventing herself. First as Christine And The Queens: a representation of her own self-acceptance in slick suits and shiny brogues. And more recently as Chris: someone tougher, bolder, more macho, more lusty. ‘In my love life, I’m like: What would Chris do?’ she says. ‘She would just go and ring at the door!’
These transformations aren’t stage personas – they’re a way for her to feel empowered. ‘I like the mess it creates,’ she says. ‘I’d rather be messy than trapped. It’s me without any form of apology, and I apologise a lot in real life.’ (It’s true, she keeps saying sorry for eating breakfast as we talk.)

Ten years ago Héloïse Letissier became Christine. The story of that creation sounds like a modern-day fairytale, but she swears it’s true. She had been kicked out of drama school for wanting to stage a play, something only the men on the course were allowed to do. ‘I was 20 and I didn’t know I could experience such blatant sexism,’ she says, taking a bite of her fried egg. ‘I was this screw-faced young woman looking lost.’

So there she was: in London, in a club, covered in a rash, looking distraught, when… ‘These drag queens came up to me and were like, “Are you okay?”’ she says. Like fairy godmothers only with better contour, the queens spent two weeks looking after Chris, helping her work out who she wanted to be. Something clicked. She started writing songs as Christine And The Queens.

A lot has happened since then. Chris’s album ‘Chaleur Humaine’ was the best-selling UK debut of 2016. She played her first Glastonbury the day after Brexit, and managed to channel the intense mood of the crowd in a way that other performers might have rejected. ‘I started to do absurd things like fighting the rain,’ she says. ‘It felt like a moment to let your imagination contradict what could be happening.’

She’s twice been nominated for International Female Solo Artist at the Brits, a rare achievement for a French artist in a category usually dominated by US and Anglophone megastars. She was even invited to write a song for Rihanna. ‘It was about sending nudes,’ says Chris. But the Barbadian star turned it down. ‘I think it was because it was really sad, depressing and feeble,’ she says. ‘She was too fierce for it. In a way the rejection was validating: reject me, I’m not worthy!’

Ri might have flirted with working with Chris, but her proper celebrity admirer is Elton John. He sends her emails of encouragement from his iPad. And Madonna – one of Chris’s idols – brought her out on stage in Paris in 2015 for a performance that involved Madge spanking her in front of the crowd. ‘It was the best sexual experience I’ve ever had!’ says Chris. ‘She’s powerful – she’s like: I’m going to eat you, and you, and you. I’m going to have sex with you. And people are like: Yeah! Then she called me “Christina”. It was slightly shady, but I loved it. It’s like, thank you, punish me more!’
OPEN THIS WEEK
9 – 12 MAY
Hampstead Heath
London

Affordable Art Fair

GET YOUR HALF PRICE TICKETS
Free Drinks & Live DJ at the Thursday Late | Yoga & Breath Workshops | Pop-up Cinema
Book using code TIMEOUT at affordableartfair.com*

*Offer excludes Charity Preview, based on on-the-door prices, booking fee applies Performing has always been a huge deal for Chris. Her shows are theatrical, choreographed in a way that goes way further than most pop routines. You might see her wrestling an invisible figure in a river or flexing her muscles on some scaffolding. 'Someone told me that my new tour is like a weird Broadway show,' she laughs.

Chris will be bringing her blend of pop, theatre and contemporary dance to All Points East in Victoria Park in just a few weeks – her biggest UK headline gig so far. 'The tour sometimes calls for being really attentive and silent but it’s still a pop show,' she explains. 'It’s this in-between thing and in London people really get it.' When she performed the show in France, it wasn’t quite the same. 'They were like, should we clap?'

It’s not the only time she’s felt misunderstood in her native country. When she returned as Chris, the French media were puzzled. 'I was asked too many times whether I was transitioning,' she says. 'I can be Chris and I can be a woman. It's as if there's only one way to be feminine.' She says French magazines psychoanalysed her haircut: “She’s getting rid of her will to bear a child.” I was like, it’s 2019. Are you fucking mad?

Still, Chris is hopeful that conversations around gender and sexuality are becoming more open. It’s something she has noticed when talking about her identity as a pansexual woman. ‘Between the first and the second record, I feel the difference,’ she says, explaining that when she released her debut album in 2014, she mentioned her sexuality and people thought she’d invented the word ‘pansexual’. But she also worries about LGBT+ culture getting co-opted by corporations. ‘Sometimes queer is just digested in a capitalist perspective,’ she says. ‘Like “Ten Queer Artists to Watch” and you’re like, actually, that’s reduced it again, when you just want to express your freedom.’ When ‘Chris’ was released, some people congratulated her on what they saw as a slick marketing campaign, rather than an expression of who she is. ‘It’s been my life for ever. I’m talking about it because I don’t want to hide it,’ she says.

Her openness is having an impact. Chris says she gets letters, mostly from young girls, thanking her. ‘They say: “You gave me the audacity to be empowered in my sexuality, to embrace that thing I didn’t want to embrace.”’ she says. ‘That’s when you’re like, oh wow, this is real. It resonates.’

Despite this, she has no interest in becoming a spokesperson for her identity. In fact, it seems she doesn’t take herself that seriously. At one point she starts to tell me ‘A great record is like a journey…’, before laughing at herself – ‘I want to slap myself. I’m sorry.’ At another she switches from talking earnestly about the state of pop music – ‘I’m fascinated by songs that are like hook, hook, hook’ – to pretending to be a fish (a contender for her next reinvention, apparently).

It’s why Chris is the pop star we need right now. Yes, she blurs the lines of femininity, creates a dialogue around sexuality and refuses to be categorised – but it’s more than that. It’s her energy. On stage she leaps, she spins, she sweats, she takes you out of your comfort zone. She’s an explosion of weird fun. If you go to All Points East she’ll drag you out of the gloom of politics and climate change and into her safe space with unstoppable force. ‘Everytime I’m mad I’m like, I can’t believe I get to be Chris,’ she says. ‘I feel like I’m slaying when I’m on stage: I need it.’

Right now, we need it too.
Become an influencer

It’s not the size of your audience that matters, it’s the impression you make on them. And with spring being the season for new ideas and inspiration, there’s never been a better time to become a Guardian and Observer subscriber.

You’ll save up to 37% a year when you subscribe today. That’s 11 free issues every month, filled with insightful political coverage, award-winning sport reporting, brilliant recipes and more to enjoy yourself, or share with family and friends.

Pick up the newspaper or visit gu.com/timeout to subscribe
Bars full of plants

Londoners’ passion for foliage has spread to the city’s watering holes. Stop and smell the roses (and take a cheeky Insta pic) at these leafy spots.

The lush beer garden with optional roof
Pub-food-hall hybrid The Prince has four eateries, three bars and London’s largest beer garden draped in lots of trailing foliage. There’s even a retractable roof if the weather turns.
→ 14 Lillie Rd. West Brompton Overground.

The plant-filled cocktail parlour
Thought your house plant collection was impressive? Wait until you step inside Mr Fogg’s House of Botanicals. It’s packed full of plants, with pastel decor and floral armchairs to match.
→ 48 Newman St. Goodge St.

The bar with wall-to-wall garnishes
At Bourne & Hollingsworth’s new ‘living bar’, you’ll find greenery growing up the walls. But the foliage isn’t just there to look pretty – it provides fresh ingredients and garnishes for your drinks.
→ Bourne & Hollingsworth Buildings, 42 Northampton Rd. Farringdon.

The seasonal shape-shifter
There are two botanical bars on the cards at South Place Hotel. Drink gin cocktails in the Enchanted Garden until May 12 before it transforms into the Mediterranean-inspired Rosé Riviera.
→ 3 South Place. Moorgate.

The Japanese cherry blossom den
Every year, Shochu Lounge brings spring indoors with its dreamy sakura installation. It’s now a permanent fixture, so you can sip cocktails under a pink blossom-covered ceiling all year round.
→ Roka, 37 Charlotte St. Goodge St.
Believe in... great value every time you reach for the remote

Just £22 a month for Sky TV

RIVIERA
Starts 23 May

GAME OF THRONES
Mondays 9pm

For new and existing customers  Sky TV  0800 759 1685

Standard set-up: New customers: £20. £10 admin fee for existing TV customers without Sky Entertainment. Existing Sky HD TV customers upgrading to Sky Q: up to £189. £22 per month with new 18-month minimum term. Standard price of £27 per month applies when not signing up to a minimum term or outside of minimum term. Prices may go up during your minimum term. All Sky Q Kit is loaned to you at no cost and must be returned at the end of your subscription. Subject to status. Upfront payment may be required. General: Non-standard set-up may cost extra. Weekend set-up service visits £19 extra. Connect to TV using HDMI cable. You own the Sky dish. Prices may vary if you live in a flat. You must get any consents required (e.g. landlord’s). UK Channel Islands and Isle of Man residential customers only. Email address required so we can keep in touch about your services. Further terms apply. Correct as of 8 April 2019. Game of Thrones © 2019 Home Box Office, Inc. All rights reserved. HBO® and all related programs are the property of Home Box Office, Inc.
I WANT TO BREATHE CLEANER AIR.

Smart meters can’t solve climate change on their own. But with the smarter, more efficient energy grid they help to create, they’re a start.

Search: I want a smart meter or call: 0300 304 9000
Lyle’s Golden Syrup is the oldest brand in the world – and it all started in east London. Natasha Wynarczyk visits it to lift the lid on how the sticky stuff gets made

LYLE’S GOLDEN SYRUP recipe is top secret. It’s so secret, in fact, that getting access to the factory takes months of negotiating. It’s finally paid off, though. ‘Big Syrup’ has agreed to let me visit its Plaistow Wharf works in east London, where the amber goo has been made since 1885.

Nestled behind West Silvertown DLR station, the grey factory is identifiable thanks to the giant Lyle’s can on its side and the scent of burnt sugar hanging in the air. At the entrance there’s a stone carving of Lyle’s creepy logo – a rotting lion carcass surrounded by bees with the legend ‘Out of the Strong Came Forth Sweetness’. It’s a marketing strategy that probably wouldn’t get past advertising bods today, but the packaging of Lyle’s Golden Syrup has been unchanged since its inception, and the product holds a Guinness World Record for the world’s oldest branding.

Before I venture inside the factory and see how the secretive sweet stuff is made, I get to visit another location: Tate & Lyle’s sugar refinery, at the other end of what was once called the ‘Sugar Mile’. Local affairs manager Chris Abell meets me at the building, which is tucked away behind a massive wall near City Airport.

Now mainly building sites and luxury flats, in the early twentieth century the Sugar Mile was the UK’s hub for all things sweet, from Trebor mints to Keiller’s marmalade. But its unchallenged sugar daddies were nineteenth-century refiners Abram Lyle and Henry Tate. Lyle owned Plaistow Wharf and Tate the refinery. Although their two companies were later merged by their descendants, Abell explains that the two were actually bitter rivals in their lifetimes. ‘They would get the same train from Fenchurch Street,’ he says. ‘And ignore each other.’

Stepping inside the main warehouse at the refinery, I am confronted by a gigantic pile of unrefined cane sugar – around 50,000 tonnes of the brown stuff. I fight an insatiable urge to dive... headfirst into this crystalline Everest, which crunches under my feet like snow. The raw sugar is delivered by ship to the jetty outside from places such as Brazil, Mozambique and the Caribbean. Abell is keen to stress that at this stage it’s not edible: that happens when it’s refined into the stuff that you might stir into your cuppa. Some of this unrefined sugar is taken by lorry along to Plaistow Wharf, where it gets turned into Lyle’s Golden Syrup. Abell tells me that the company’s tin line there churns out a staggering 40,000 cans a day, more than 10 million a year. And, with that, it’s time to walk back along Sugar Mile and see that process in action.

The first thing I learn when I get to Plaistow Wharf is that only nine people in the world – nicknamed ‘Goldies’ – know Lyle’s syrup recipe. The second is that its history is even richer than the product. The ingredients haven’t changed since Victorian times, meaning the tin in your cupboard contains the same stuff that was taken by explorer Captain Scott on his doomed 1910 Antarctic expedition. The Plaistow Wharf factory was targeted by German bombers 68 times during World War II but never stopped production.

Plaistow Wharf is a buzzing hive of activity. In the first room I’m taken to, I’m hypnotised by the tins being made. Machines that date back to the 1940s whizz and clank as the metal is beaten into shape. At the end of the line, a wheel of nozzles creates a vacuum in each tin, to check it’s airtight – those that aren’t are swiftly whisked away.

Everything is operated by a panel in a control room, which Abell describes as ‘the heart of the building’. It looks like Homer Simpson’s workspace. I was expecting Willy Wonka rivers of gold, but the factory is more like a laboratory.

I meet one of the ‘Goldies’, Shruti Kawa, the factory’s process area manager. Despite my penetrating, Paxman-esque style of questioning, she won’t give up the recipe, though she is prepared to give me some more details. ‘We take the by-product of sugar refining, a substance called “jet”,’ she explains. ‘About 100 tonnes of jet come from the refinery every day. It’s a very dark syrup that crystallises easily. We process it so it won’t crystallise for more than five years.’

The process that stops the jet crystallising creates Golden Syrup. As the colour molecules are removed, it turns from a dark red to the famous dark yellow hue, and it thickens. ‘It takes eight hours from beginning to end,’ says Kawa.

We head into the next room, where another machine fills each tin with syrup. It’s heated to 46°C before pouring to make it runnier. Abell hands me a spoon and pulls a tin off the line, encouraging me to try some. The warm sweetness transports me right back to childhood baking. At the end of each day, the tins (and squeezy bottles) are loaded on to pallets and transported around the country, eventually finding their way into kitchen cupboards, cakes and cookies.

As I leave, Abell presents me with a memento – a tin of syrup, of course. I leave on a sugar high, satisfied that I’ve finally managed to sweet-talk my way into this holy of holies. Even if they do keep a very tight lid on their recipe.
Locking and unlocking your card with our app makes banking easier

Credit cards often play hide and seek. With a simple tap, our app lets you lock your card when you misplace it and unlock it if you find it. We’re always thinking of new ways to make it easier to control your banking.

We are what we do

Search NatWest Easier Banking
Movies on the River

What is it? Time Out’s open-top cinema boat is back on the Thames for the summer.

Why go? Imagine watching your fave flicks on a boat under the stars. We can make that dream a reality with our epic food- and drink-fuelled movie cruises, y’all.

What’s exclusive? Tickets are for Time Out readers only: you can’t get them elsewhere. From £19.

→ Tower Millennium Pier. Tower Hill. Select dates until Aug 3.
www.timeout.com/movieboat

Royal Academy of Arts Summer Exhibition

What is it? The annual celebration of art and creativity.

Why go? The RA’s 250th Summer Exhibition last year was a huge success. Now the world’s biggest open-submission art show returns, co-ordinated by acclaimed painter Jock McFadyen. It’s a must-see.

→ Royal Academy. Piccadilly Circus.

Inamo

What is it? A meal at a cutting-edge Love London Award-winner.

Why go? Apart from the interactive ordering system and mouthwatering pan-Asian cuisine? You can choose three dishes from a 25-item menu, as well as a yakitori plate – and we’re throwing in two drinks for good measure.

What’s exclusive? Our tickets save you 25 percent – now just £22.

www.timeout.com/inamo2019

Laki Kane

What is it? A rum-making (and tasting) experience.

Why go? This boozey adventure will take you back to the seventeenth century, when the rum trade was booming. Taste a selection of rums, get clued-up on the spirit’s history, then select spices and fruits to create your very own bottle. Chin chin!

What’s exclusive? Tickets – including a goody bag – are £39.

www.timeout.com/laki

The Courtyard

What is it? Bottomless brunch at a fun Fulham boozer.

Why go? Brunch without booze is futile – it doesn’t take a genius to know that. So we’ve teamed up with The Courtyard to bring you its bangin’ new brunch spread with endless tipples for £15 less.

What’s exclusive? Brunch with bottomless drinks for one-and-a-half hours costs just £20.

www.timeout.com/courtyard19

Food, drink, screenings, pop-ups: don’t miss our exclusive offers and discounts

DON’T MISS
UNMISSABLE WEEKENDS IN MANCHESTER

CREATE YOURS AT
VISITMANCHESTER.COM/MIF

4 – 21 July

YOKO ONO / IDRIS ELBA / SKEPTA / DAVID LYNCH / JANELLE MONÁE / PHILIP GLASS / IVO VAN HOVE / MARY ANNE HOBBS / MAXINE PEAKE / LAURIE ANDERSON / RAMBERT / TANIA BRUGUERA / 59 PRODUCTIONS / KWAME KWEI-ARMAH / HALLÉ / SIDI LARBI CHERKAOUI / LEO WARNER / ABIDA PARVEEN / TRAJAL HARRELL /

MIF
Manchester International Festival
2019
4 – 21 July
mif.co.uk
Destination Pride

These kikis are about to kick off. Don’t miss the out-and-proud LGBT+ parades and parties worth travelling for.

WorldPride

New York June

This year is a significant one for all Pride events, but particularly for New York, as the city marks 50 years since the Stonewall riots, where trans women, drag queens and queer kids kickstarted the gay liberation movement. The usual, and huge, Pride March takes place on June 30, but NYC is also hosting WorldPride for the whole month, so expect to see the Big Apple taken over by even more massive parties and events than in past years. Times Square will host the closing party action, but all over the city there’ll be talks and celebrations buzzing enough to compete with that tourisy hotspot. We’re even hearing rumours that the queen herself, Madonna, may perform... → 2019-worldpride-stonewall50.nycpride.org

Pride Toronto

Toronto June

Spread over June and with parades in the last week of the month, Pride Toronto is one of the world’s biggest celebrations. It’s also one of the most diverse, with a Dyke March and a Trans March as well as the Pride Parade. Then there are the parties, which happen everywhere from the Royal Ontario Museum to inside an aquarium. On Sunday June 23, head away from the Gay Village and visit TreeHouse Party, an all-day rave featuring drag queens and DJ sets from likes of The Black Madonna – best of all, ticket proceeds from the party will go to The 519, the city’s LGBT+ centre. → www.pridetoronto.com

Magical Pride

Disneyland Paris June 1

Sure, some have bemoaned Pride becoming increasingly commercial, but what could be more fabulous than celebrating being queer with Mickey and the gang? Disneyland Paris’s Magical Pride will have the iconic castle for a backdrop and will feature live performances from Years & Years and Corine, with the theme park hosting a new March of Diversity Parade, too. Meet your fave Disney characters or have a go on selected rides well into the night. From our point of view, this could be a possibly unique opportunity to ride the teacups with a drag queen. → www.magicalpride.com
Europride
Vienna June 1-16
‘Together and Proud’ is the theme of this year’s Europride, which lands in Vienna in June. Along with heaps of official events – from days at the beach to cocktail parties – Vienna is bucking the trend of paid Pride events, making access to the Europride Village, Park and Parade (June 15) free of charge. If Pride is all about partying for you, book to stay near Wienzeile, where the city’s LGBT+ nightlife is concentrated. This year, the biggest event is the official Pride afterparty at The Circus Club (June 15), complete with a European house DJ line-up and a laser show. But hey, with anything up to a million people expected to join in with this Pride celebration, there’ll be way more than one chance to get together with the queer community.
→ europride2019.at

Tel Aviv Pride
Tel Aviv June 9-14
It’s probably worth getting yourself a TLV19 Party Pass, which gives you entry to either three or five parties during the week’s festivities in Tel Aviv. With temperatures in the mid-twenties, you’ll be able to celebrate at rooftop kikis or party in a water park. The final stop on Tel Aviv’s Pride Parade (June 14) is Charles Clore Park, where celebrations inevitably spill out on to the beach and carry on till sunset. Pack your Speedos for party time.
→ www.facebook.com/tlvpride

São Paulo Gay Pride Parade
São Paulo June 23
Last year, 3 million people took to the streets to celebrate Pride in São Paulo. With the current political climate in Brazil, this year’s event feels more essential than ever. Hopefully the crowds will still show up in solidarity with the LGBT+ community and in the face of hate to put on the biggest Pride party the world has ever seen. Hotspots for celebrations should be centred in the queer neighbourhoods of Frei Caneca and Largo do Arouche.
→ www.facebook.com/paradasp
San Francisco Pride
San Francisco June 29–30
Like many big city Pride events, San Francisco’s parade has been accused of being overrun with corporate floats. Well, that hasn’t stopped the city’s flourishing LGBT+ community from creating their own kind of party. On the Friday before Pride, the Trans March (the largest trans Pride event in the US) takes place in and around Mission Dolores Park, while on the Saturday of Pride weekend, many bars and clubs host their own shindigs. People even open up their homes for the day, with the area between The Castro and Mission District feeling like one ginormous street party. If leather and fetish gear are your kink, hold off your visit for the Folsom Street Fair, an inclusive festival taking place on September 2.

Madrid Pride
Madrid June 28–July 7
As Europe’s biggest Pride, Madrid’s celebration feels more like a festival than a rally. The city’s gay neighbourhood Chueca is flooded with people and, more importantly, parties, while unofficial antics often take place in Malasana. The pervasive We Pride Festival takes over a number of venues for three days with the biggest DJs, hottest boys and most fabulous drag queens while the parade itself is on July 6 and runs from 5pm to midnight. It starts at Atocha Station and ends in Plaza de Colón, where a massive stage hosts performers and talks. Before the parade, there are heaps of cultural events, such as art exhibitions, film screenings and the now famous high heels race (okay, maybe it’s not that cultural).

Christopher Street Day Berlin
Berlin July 27
Named after the New York street where the Stonewall riots took place, Berlin’s CSD is split into two sections: the parade – which sets off from Ku’damm and Joachimsthaler Strasse and ends at the Brandenburg Gate; and the rally – a stage with musical performances, talks and DJs. On the previous weekend, you’ll also find the Lesbian & Gay City Festival, a two-day celebration in Nollendorfplatz, which hosts street food stalls, music and dancing. As this is Berlin, there’s plenty that’s alternative – keep an eye out for breakaway marches with politics at the forefront, or if crowds are too much for you, check out the queer picnic at Volkspark Hasenheide, an inclusive space regardless of sexuality or gender identity. And with Berlin’s diverse club scene (where basically anything goes), afterparties will be thriving.

Reykjavik Pride
Reykjavik August 8–17
Now in its twentieth year, Reykjavik Pride (or Hinsegindagar, which translates as ‘queer days’) is usually attended by a third of the country. This year, the celebrations are being extended by four days, kicking off with an opening ceremony on August 8. In previous years, the city has welcomed volunteers to paint a big rainbow downtown. And then there’s the queer cruise (no, not that kind): a party boat that sails around the small islands and the coast. There was even one year when the city’s mayor marched as part of the parade in full drag.

Sydney Gay & Lesbian Mardi Gras
Sydney February 29 2020
Although it’s held out of Pride season, this famous festival draws the big guns, with Cher and Kylie (naturally) both dropping by to perform in recent years. As well as the massive parade, there are iconic events such as the Strictly Kaftan Party (where floaty beachwear is compulsory) and Queer Art After Hours, which encompasses DJ sets to guided art tours by drag queens. Time to get saving for a visit Down Under.

By Alim Kheraj
Who has more pride than Heather Small.
DISCOVER THE WORLD

THAILAND
BANGKOK, JUNGLE & BEACH
SAVE £375pp
14 DAYS FROM £1469pp
BANGKOK | CHIANG MAI | PHUKET
11 NIGHTS IN ★★ HOTELS
STREET EATS BY TUK TUK TOUR
PHI PHI ISLAND HOPPER TOUR
INCLUDES INTERNATIONAL & INTERNAL FLIGHTS & TRANSFERS
REF: 2806729

SOUTH AFRICA
CAPE, WINE & WHALES
SAVE £362pp
13 DAYS FROM £1899pp
CAPE TOWN | STELLENBOSCH | HERMANUS
10 NIGHTS IN 4–5★ HOTELS
11 DAYS’ CAR HIRE
ROBBEN ISLAND TOUR | CAPE POINT TOUR
DINE & VINE TOUR
INCLUDES INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS
REF: 4919162

NEW ZEALAND
SCENIC SOUTH WILDLIFE & WINE
SAVE £366pp
16 DAYS FROM £2589pp
QUEENSTOWN | DUNEDIN | CHRISTCHURCH
KAIKOURA | BLenheim | NELSON
12 NIGHTS IN 4–5★ HOTELS
11 DAYS’ CAR HIRE
PENINSULA ENCOUNTERS & ALBATROSS TOUR
WINE TRAIL | WHALE WATCHING TOUR
INCLUDES INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS & TRANSFERS
REF: 3760060

FLIGHT CENTRE® Excellent ★★★★★ Based on over 18,000 reviews ★ Trustpilot

flightcentre.co.uk | 0800 188 4588 | For First & Business Class 0800 082 5924

Prices are correct as at 1 May and are subject to change. Prices may be higher or unavailable for certain travel dates. All prices are per person. Holidays and accommodation are based on two adults sharing. For full booking conditions visit www.flightcentre.co.uk.
WITH ITS BAROQUE buildings and tinkling trams, Vienna can feel a bit like a period film set. That’s only part of the story, though. Scratch the surface and you’ll find the Austrian capital combines Berlin’s buzz with Prague’s good looks, adding a dash of its own coffee-and-cake-focused charm for good measure. Historic squares lined with imposing buildings – from Stephansplatz to Palmenhaus (it’ll take about four hours) or hop on the 38A from Heiligenstadt via Grinzing (that’ll take about 25 minutes). From the top you can see all the way to Schneeberg, the mountain that provides the city with crystal-clear spring water.

If you only do one thing
No visit to Vienna is complete without sachertorte. The ganache-topped, apricot-jam-filled cake is such a big deal, it was the subject of a legal feud: the Hotel Sacher and the Demel bakery fought for nine years to call theirs the original. Hotel Sacher won that battle but for us, Demel’s edges it on flavour.

If you want to eat and have cash to splash
Get in the queue for the legendary Café Central. The tiled coffee house has been an institution since 1876, and it’s witnessed its share of history (Lenin and Trotsky were regulars). Tough out lukewarm service for superlative schnitzel and warm apple strudel.

If you’re eating on a shoestring
Low-it dumpling specialist Mama Liu & Sons is always rammed for a reason. Feast on smacked cucumber and mouth-tingling northern Chinese-style cold noodles for well under €10.

If you want to try the local booze
Erich, a funky subterranean bar off Sankt Ulrichs Platz, has a serious selection of Austrian brews, from nutty Schladming Erbräu pilsner to full-bodied Pannonian cider.

If you want to do something unusual
The Spanish Riding School’s Lipizzaner horses have a special talent: they can dance. Specially bred and trained white stallions perform mesmerising dressage routines to classical music. Book tickets to morning practice, or get in free with a Vienna Pass.

If you want to get cultured
Does Vienna have the world’s artiest district? Quite possibly. The MuseumsQuartier’s buildings are packed with masterpieces by the likes of Egon Schiele and Gustav Klimt. Coming to the MQ also puts you within a short stroll of the Imperial Palace (Hofburg) and the former tropical house Palmenhaus, which now does great cocktails.

If you want to get close to nature
As well as making psychoanalysis famous, Vienna’s preeminent brainbox gave his name to a picnic spot. Overlooked by the neo-gothic Votiv Church, Sigmund Freud Park has 100 comfy sunloungers set out in summer months. They’re free to use and there’s no need to discuss your dreams while lying on one.

If you want to pretend you’re a local
Hole up in Fürth Kaffee on Kirchengasse. This cool café and co-working space is one of Vienna’s pioneering roasteries, with a huge menu of speciality coffees.

If you want to soak up the vibes
There’s nowhere nicer to while away an afternoon than the Naschmarkt. Vienna’s world-famous open-air market. It’s nearly a mile long, selling local produce from its 120-plus stalls. Grab a pavement table at modern Israeli eatery Neni am Naschmarkt and watch the world go by with a plate of sabich and falafel.

If you want to take a day trip
It’s easy to forget that Vienna is surrounded by woods and rolling green hills. For a jaw-dropping view of it all, follow the marked city hiking trail to the Kahlenberg (it’ll take about four hours) or hop on the 38A from Heiligenstadt via Grinzing (that’ll take about 25 minutes). From the top you can see all the way to Schneeberg, the mountain that provides the city with crystal-clear spring water. ■ Emma Hughes
If you buy an annual multi-trip policy you get the chance, every month, to WIN a holiday of a lifetime!

INSURE AND GO

Take us away with you

T&Cs apply. Insure & Go Insurance Limited is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority, firm reference number 309572.
LIKE ANY WELL-ROUNDED twentysomething, I spent my tweens drinking questionable alcopops, picking out polyphonic ringtones and watching gameshow re-runs on Challenge TV, where ‘The Crystal Maze’ really had its way with me, thanks to charismatic bald Maze Master Richard O’Brien.

Fast-forward to the 2016 reboot and Stephen Merchant slipped into the presenter role, followed by current host Richard Ayoade. Sticking with the original format, the show has spawned a new set of maze devotees and inspired The Crystal Maze Live Experience escape game, which has just moved from its old digs in Angel to a new location on Shaftesbury Avenue. Now occupying the old Trocadero space (which has been given a £5 million renovation), the revamped maze is twice the size of its predecessor, with 32 fresh crystal-collecting games and a glamorous on-site bar.

A note to all escape-room nerds: the maze’s production value will make you quiver. The set-up unites the classic Aztec, Medieval, Future and Industrial zones, which are all whimsically decorated in the style of the ‘90s show. As you’re led around by a Maze Master – ours was partial to innuendos like ‘put the ball in your sack’ – it’s hard not to get swept up in game-based delirium.

Your team captain is in charge of choosing which person plays each game to win the all-important crystals - each giving you five precious

JUST OPENED

The Crystal Maze Live Experience
West End

Start the fans! The live version of the cult ’90s game show has moved to a West End location. We head along to find out what’s new seconds to catch golden tickets in The Crystal Dome. As ever, the challenges fall into mental, skill, physical and mystery categories and the new Maze packs some particularly tricky puzzles. We were stumped by an especially difficult hand-eye coordination game involving resuscitating an alien. But, weaving between zones is just as amusing as crystal-nabbing, whether you’re throwing yourself down a slide or shimmying down a ladder.

Once you’ve worked your way around the zones and collected as many crystals as possible, it’s time to face The Dome itself. It’s every bit as surreal as you’d think. In fact, hearing the words ‘start the fans, please’ and then wildly grabbing gold tickets is distractingly silly... so we’ll blame our terrible team score on that, then. But it’s wearing the orange bomber jackets and high-fiving over shitty crystals that really counts. My advice? Ditch any uptight tendencies. Instead, peer through little windows and constantly shout well-meaning but totally useless advice at your mates. Become the competitive idiot that you really are. And, naturally, invest in some flattering team lycra. ■

WHAT IS IT?
A recreation of the cult ’90s game show in the iconic Trocadero building.

WHY GO?
To bond with your mates while grabbing at gold tickets in a giant geometric cage.

→ 22–32 Shaftesbury Avenue, W1D 7EU.
→ Piccadilly Circus.
From £49.99 per person.

By Katherine Lovage
Who knows there’s no place like dome.

MAZE MAXIMS
Crystal Maze artistic director Neil Connolly gives us his top tips for tackling the escape game

LISTEN TO YOUR MAZE MASTER
They are your best friend. They know the answers, want you to win crystals and are constantly trying to help you. Remember their jokes are veiled as clues and their clues are veiled as jokes.

ASK FOR TIME CHECKS
The Maze Master’s job is opening doors and telling you how much time you have left for each game. Keep asking to avoid moments like watching seven people scream ‘THIRTY SECONDS!’ in a panic.

EXPECT SURPRISES
If you pick Big Steve to do a physical challenge because he’s massive and really strong, you’ll look silly when he has to delicately climb through a room of ropes without upsetting very sensitive bells tied to them. Bring a good cross-section of friends and expect the unexpected.

CELEBRATE FAILURE
Everybody comes to the live experience saying ‘I’m gonna smash it and get 16 crystals.’ Then they realise how hard and stressful it can be when you’re inside a room trying to solve a really hard puzzle while people shout wildly counterintuitive advice at you. Just embrace it. I play the games every day and I’m still terrible at most of them.

GET TO THE BACK
Most of the tickets in The Dome are actually at the back. So get away from the door, use your hands like pincers and flail wildly for those golden sweet wrappers. When in doubt, just have a dance around.

HAVE FUN
Be competitive, but realise there’s nothing on the line apart from making great memories – and memories are best made as a team. One of the best teams we had was a group of mums who spent 45 seconds just having a lovely time dancing around inside The Dome.

HSHUTTERSTOCK

Have your ‘Great Escape’ at timeout.com/escaperooms
Go behind the scenes of the art world with these first-class summer courses at Sotheby’s Institute of Art.

L

love art? Then Sotheby’s Institute of Art has summer courses that you’ll definitely want to pencil in. They start in June and combine classroom learning, art experiences, seminars and lectures from international art world experts and leading art practitioners, as well as visits to galleries, auction houses, museums, studios and more. Here are four of our favourites.

Art and Its Markets
Time may be money, but so is art. If you can’t tell your big-hitters from priceless gems, then no worries: this course delivers commercial savvy. Develop your critical insight and valuation skills, and find out how auction houses operate.

Introduction to Contemporary Art
To stay up-to-date with the art world, jump on this Sotheby’s Institute of Art course. Over five days, you’ll cover international art in different forms from the 1960s onwards, and drop in on some great London galleries and museums.

Art Crime
From fakes and forgeries to thefts and illegal underground networks, this course digs into the multi-billion-pound art crime industry. Explore how it impacts the international art market and the challenges and opportunities that it brings to the industry as a whole.

Women and Art
This is your chance to uncover the experiences and constraints of female artists, while interrogating the presentation of the female form in art. You also get to explore the influence of gender on curating and censorship.

→ For more information, visit www.sothebysinstitute.com/summer
SOMETHING FOR THE WEEKEND

Friday

Peckham Craft Show

The mainstay of London Craft Week returns, filling Copeland Park with more than 50 skilful makers. Highlights include printing and tapestry workshops, plus displays from ceramicist Lily Pearlmain and textile weaver Sophie Graney.

DRINK

The London Whisky Weekender

Swot up on the ins and outs of Scotch et al from the best in the business, all the while enjoying street food and live DJs. Wham, dram, thank you ma’am.

HONK

City of London Brass Band Free Spring Concert

See some real brass nerve and hear some of your favourite tunes from stage and screen, at this gloriously free concert in the City.

WATCH

Stella Live

This Telegraph mag celebration features a, well, stellar line-up, including Davina McCall, Mary Portas and Jo Malone.

SHOP

SheInspiresMe Car Boot

Indulge in guilt-free retail therapy at this stylistic sale. Profits go towards Women for Women International, a charity helping female war survivors.

→ Brewer Street Car Park. Piccadilly, Sat May 11. £10.

We Love Cheese

Brie-sy does it at this humongous cheese fest, where dairy lovers can drool over cheeses hard, soft, savoury and sweet, from traders competing for the coveted We Love Cheese Cup.

Don’t Touch

Independent Ceramics Market

A free weekend market showcasing more than 40 ceramicists, including current students, up-and-coming graduates, and established ceramicists.

LISTEN

The London Ear Guided Walk

Train your ears to tune into birdsong and traffic on this walk, while learning how the noises of our streets have changed over time.

→ Meet at St Paul’s station. Sun May 12. £15-£18.

More crafty escapades at timeout.com/thingstodo
GET READY TO feel a palpable energia in the air around Camden this week as it plays host to a night of high-flying manoeuvres, terrifying leg drops and tornillo twists. Forget WWE, this is Mexico’s version of pro-wrestling where masked fighters beat seven shades of burrito out of each other while dressed in flamboyant spandex. Lucha Libre became a cultural phenomenon in Mexico in the early twentieth century (it’s the most popular sport in the country after football) and has since half-nelsoned hearts across the globe. Now, the sport’s finest fighters are turning The Roundhouse into a Mexican arena worthy of the greatest Luchadores. Go to see bad guys (‘rudos’), who employ underhand tactics to break the rules, and good guys (‘técnicos’), who use complex and spectacular moves to fly through the air and smack into each other at high speed. Considered superheroes in Mexico, some of the country’s most famous Luchadores will be joining the over-the-top night of free-fighting. El Hijo del Santo, the world-famous ‘Silver Masked Man’, will be in attendance, as will Cassandro El Exótico, ‘The Liberace of Lucha Libre’. What? We did say it was OTT.

Alexandra Sims and Bobby Palmer

Luchadores on London
We get Lucha Libre wrestlers’ takes on the capital

Silver King
What wrestling move best sums up London? “La Tapatia” (Surfboard) because it’s old, authentic, exciting, fast and you feel on top of one another. It’s popular with male and female wrestlers and it’s a pain in the backside!

Cassandro El Exótico
Where can Londoners learn more about Lucha Libre? ‘The London school of Lucha Libre at the Resistance Gallery in Bethnal Green is without doubt the best place to learn and find out if you can make it in the ring.’

Metallico
Which type of London commuter would you want to chokeslam? ‘Anyone who is arrogant, rude and pushy. And cyclists who wear lycra and think they can run over anyone. They are not superheroes – we are!’

Sitting by train. It’s happening.

in Norwich. And the beautiful sights of Constable country, and with great fares from Liverpool Street Station.
TO DO
The best events in your area

Central  North  South  East  West

BRAIN FOOD

1️⃣ Bazaar with Sabrina Ghayour
British-Iranian chef Sabrina Ghayour, author of the bestselling ‘Persiana’, will be bringing a selection of vibrant vegetarian Middle Eastern dishes to Dulwich during this demonstration of recipes from her new cookbook. It’ll also feature a Q&A with Guardian food journalist Felicity Cloake.

→ The MCT at Alleyn’s, North Dulwich rail. Tue May 7. £10.

3️⃣ Food For Thought Supper Club
Knowledge tastes good. Stand-up Andrew O’Neill tackles the subject of the supernatural, while you tackle Fish House’s fried chicken.

SUMMER + ART

COURSES FOR ALL AGES. ALL SUMMER. IN LONDON, NEW YORK, AND ONLINE.

5️⃣ Spy Run London
On this challenge-laden, clue-ridden run, you’ll tackle a 5-10km route while pretending to be an ‘operative’ tracking and locating an enemy agent who you’re tasked with ‘taking out’. All the while you can take in some of our loveliest landmarks. It finishes in the pub, naturally.

→ Check website for exact meeting point. Green Park. Sat May 11. £35.

QUIRKY SPORT

1️⃣ Riot Grrls of Wrestling Present: She Persisted
Punk feminist wrestling group Eve is back for an evening of theatrical wrestling stunts fuelled with cabaret and comedy. Watch them backbreak the patriarchy.

Cabbages & Frocks Dog Day Afternoon
Think your dog’s looking a bit ruff? Bring your fur baby along to this annual Cabbages & Frocks market day featuring dog yoga, gluten-free treats and pootch portraits, with plenty of food, fashion and vintage stalls for those on two legs, too.

South London Makerspace Workshops
As part of London Craft Week, South London Makerspace is putting on a number of workshops where you can learn to make jewellery, clocks, ethical plant hangers and glowing doorsops.

The Future of Craft
Listen to lectures from industry professionals and get hands-on in terrarium-building or embroidery classes, all in the striking Oxo Tower Wharf.

London Craft Week at Coal Drops Yard
There’s candle-making and chocolate-crafting at the new King’s Cross creative hub, but the star of the show is the indigo hand-dyeing workshop from art collective Buaiaou.

The Craft of Games
Not a new George RR Martin novel, but rather an evening of discussion and performance which will explore the concept of video games as a ‘contemporary craft discipline’.

Fertility Fest
More than 200 artists and scientists are joining forces to talk about egg-freezing, miscarriage, IVF, infertility and more.

E17 Designers Spring Market
Swap Oxford Street for Orford Road, with handmade products from independent designers and makers.

Peckham Palms May Market
After the successes of their markets earlier in the year, Peckham Palms are once again laying on a weekend where you can shop for jewellery, homeware and other beautifully designed trinkets.

Peckham Vintage Kilo Sale
At this market you can grab what you fancy from the six tonnes of stock on offer, take it to the scales and pay just £1.50 per kilo for your carefully-picked wares. Get your mitts on the silk scarves and you’ll be quids in.
→ Copeland Gallery. Peckham Rye Overground. Sun May 12. £3 before noon, £1.50 after.

Slow Journalism Night
Delayed Gratification offers an antidote to fast-paced content with a lineup of ‘slow journalism’ speakers, including investigative journalist Harriet Salem and filmmaker Eli Mengem.

CRAFTY EVENTS

Real to Reel: The Craft Film Festival
This film fest is screening flicks about all kinds of making, featuring eyewear made of metal and a gym that makes bread.

London Craft Beer Cruise
The perfect mix of seafaring down the Thames and beer-quaffing. Ale tasters will be poured from ten craft breweries across six rotating lines, meaning you can sample more than your fair share of thirds before you stumble on to land again. Scrumptious.
→ Festival Pier.  ◎ Waterloo. Sat May 11. £38-£44.

Wimbledon Art Fair 2019
One hundred and fifty of London’s artists, designers and general creatives descend on Wimbledon for this four-day art fest. Meet the artists, see the art and buy some paintings, fashion pieces and ceramics, all of which will range from the definitely affordable to the well, possibly not really.

Fancy getting all bouncy on a 340-metre inflatable obstacle course at Alexandra Palace this summer? Book The Monster through us, and tickets start at just £18.
→ TIMEOUT.COM/MONSTER19

Need more inspiration? timeout.com/thingstodo
WATCH A
HAND-PICKED FILM
IN CINEMAS
EVERY SINGLE WEEK

£9.99 PER MONTH

mubi.com/go

MADELINE'S
MADELINE

A FILM BY
JOSEPHINE DECKER

MUBI GO
IN CINEMAS THIS WEEK
YOU’D HAVE EXPECTED ultra-rare footage of a peak Aretha Franklin belting out gospel songs to a small audience – including Mick Jagger dancing like your dad after too many Tia Marias – to have been guarded with the lives of all concerned. However, the singer’s intimate 1972 show at an LA Baptist church was fumbled by Oscar-winning director Sydney Pollack. He failed to match the footage with the sound during filming, resulting in an audio track that didn’t sync up. The film never saw the light of day.

Until, that is, co-director Alan Elliott got hold of it. Elliott, a music producer by profession, spent hundreds of hours in an editing suite fixing the mishandled footage. The result is ‘Amazing Grace’, a labour of love that pays off gloriously. Watching the Queen of Soul belting out the songs her pastor dad taught her as a child is nothing short of transcendent.

Franklin is backed in the concert by the Southern California Community Choir, each bizarrely kitted out in silver vests that make them look a bit like the inside of crisp packets but which somehow capture the celebratory mood. The conductor, the enigmatic Reverend James Cleveland, fights back the tears as he watches her hit outrageous high notes. It’s the Queen of Soul at her purest and will make even the most hardened atheist want to bellow ‘Yes Lord!’ from the back of the cinema (something that happened three times as I watched it).

One of its most memorable moments captures Franklin as she struts through the church in a fur coat, an ultra-confident blueprint for the modern pop star. Another shows her barking at one of her gospel musicians to start over, a reminder of her restless pursuit of perfectionism that’s riveting to witness. There’s a political edge here, too. With a poignant rendition of the old gospel classic ‘We’ll Never Grow Old’ comes the sense that she’s channeling the Civil Rights struggle, in all its pain and doggedness, into her vocals. Her vocals swing from joyous to melancholic with tingle-inducing majesty. It’s a cliché, perhaps, but the hairs on the back of your neck will be standing up.

‘Amazing Grace’ is one of those rare music docs that takes control not just of your limbs, but your mind too. You won’t be able to stop thinking about it – in all its raw passion and joy. In these days of depressing newspaper headlines, it’s a good news story you should let into your life.

Read our review with director Alan Elliott on p50.
Film

Madeline’s Madeline

‘MADELINE’S MADELINE’ OPENS with a teenaged girl pretending to be a cat, nuzzling up to a woman in a kitchen; their relationship is initially unclear. It’s intriguing, intimate, unsettling: three moods that persist throughout American director
Josephine Decker’s fascinating film.

Madeline (Helena Howard) is a young biracial actress who’s playing the lead in a piece of experimental theatre. Her mother (Miranda July) is encouraging but slightly bewildered. She’s also nervous about Madeline’s mental health, something theatre director
Evangeline (Molly Parker) seems happy to exploit for her own ends.
Earnest hippy actors and porn-obsessed boys-next-door inhabit the fringes of their lives, contributing to enjoyable darkly comic episodes.
But the centrepiece of the film is the relationship between Madeline and the two older women in her life.

It’s surely no accident that performance artist Miranda July is cast as the mother: the movie bears similarities to her own work as a filmmaker, such as ‘The Future’ and ‘Me and You and Everyone
We Know’. Meanwhile, the riveting Parker helps imbue Evangeline with characteristics that would be contradictory in a more conventional film (she’s pregnant, manipulative, affectionate, controlling and vulnerable).

The real eye-opener is the performance from Howard, as she flits between manic happiness and feral fury.
Not one of these women is the sort you would readily call ‘likeable’, which makes them all the more interesting, as does the camerawork from cinematographer Ashley Connor (‘The Miseducation of Cameron Post’), which offers dizzying routes into Madeline’s agitated headspace. Like the improvised theatre it depicts, ‘Madeline’s Madeline’ isn’t for everyone, but if you’re up for challenging, character-focused fare, you should definitely give it a whirl.

Anna Smith

FILM OF THE WEEK

WHAT IS IT...
A US indie about
a mentally ill girl
at the centre of a theatre production.

WHY GO...
For a stunning
breakout turn from
Helena Howard.

WHAT IS IT...
A US indie about
a mentally ill girl
at the centre of a theatre production.

WHY GO...
For a stunning
breakout turn from
Helena Howard.

MUSCULAR:
TONE OF A LIFETIME.
FOR THE FIRST

“ONE OF THE GREAT MUSIC FIL
THE NEW YORK TIMES

“ARETHA’S PERFORMANCE IS ELECTRIFYING”
LOS ANGELES TIMES

“EXTRAORDINARY” “TRANSCENDENT”
THE TELEGRAPH

AMAZING GRACE

WITH JAMES CLEVELAND AND THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA COMMUNITY CHOIR
IN CINEMAS FRIDAY

AN ALAN ELLIOT PRODUCTION

AmazingGraceFilm.co.uk #AmazingGrace INSTRUMENTSUK

FREE WITH MUBI GO
Watch ‘Madeline’s Madeline’
this week for free, with a MUBI subscription. Get a hand-picked cinema ticket every single week.
Find out how at www.mubi.com/go

IN PARTNERSHIP WITH
Pokémon Detective Pikachu

WHAT IS IT...
A comedy set in a world full of Japanese pocket monsters.

WHY GO...
For the Ryan Reynolds-voiced Pikachu: like Sherlock, only 160 percent cuter.

> Director Rob Letterman (PG) 104 mins.

---

IF YOU KNOW
your Psyduck from your Squirtle, this one may already be on your most-anticipated list for the year. For Pokémon devotees, it ticks all the boxes, from the moment it opens with a grazing Cubone (a pocket monster who wears a skull as a hat – cuter than it sounds) and introduces Ryme City, a place where humans and Pokémon live in harmonious incomprehension. If you aren’t one of those people, imagine watching ‘Who Framed Roger Rabbit’ after a PCP binge and you’ll get the idea.

The dense plot involves genetically mutated Pokémon, a Spielberg-y missing dad and a sinister corporation. Into the mix comes loner Tim Goodman (Justice Smith), who discovers he can talk to Pikachu, the ex-partner of his missing cop dad. Ryan Reynolds provides the furry sleuth’s voice and has a ball, chucking around inappropriate one-liners (‘Are you going to make me into a lampshade?’) with giddy abandon.

If the final act is a bit dull and the anarchic Reynolds factor ends up muzzled, director Rob Letterman makes sure not to lose that self-aware edge altogether, while providing enough Pokémon Easter eggs to satisfy the most demanding fan. He’s also helped invent a whole new movie genre: cuddly noir. ■ Phil de Semlyen

---

High Life

WHAT IS IT...
An arrestingly strange sci-fi from Claire Denis.

WHY GO...
For an out-there Robert Pattinson living the R-Patz thing light years behind.

> Director Claire Denis (18) 113 mins.

---

MANY TABOOS ARE broken in this strange, sexually charged sci-fi from French director Claire Denis. Her English-language debut, it’s a continuation of the sensual concerns in her work (‘Let the Sunshine In’) and the colonial ones (‘Beau Travail’). It also features a hyperspace voyage of alienation and grief in which Robert Pattinson co-stars with a chamber full of dildos. Well, we did say it was strange.

Drifting in a decrepit, ‘Red Dwarf’-ish spaceship, Monte (Pattinson) and his baby daughter are revealed in flashback to be the sole survivors of a mission that saw death row inmates testing a theory about black holes. Experimenting on them is Juliette Binoche’s Dr Dibs, who takes sperm from male inmates to see if conception is possible in space’s irradiated depths. The crew soothes its frustrations in the ‘Fuckbox’, that aforementioned chamber. The monkish Monte, however, abstains from it all and Pattinson mines his off-kilter ascetic with fascinating intensity.

The same is true of his director, who sidesteps the genre’s horrors (‘Alien’) and grandeur (’2001: A Space Odyssey’) to craft hypnotic sequences indebted to Tarkovsky’s ‘Solaris’. It’s juicy and carnal: Denis is less concerned with the vast void of space than with its impact on the body. It’s composed of ‘star stuff’, sure, but spit, breast milk and blood too. ■ Courtney Duckworth
WHEN ARETHA FRANKLIN played an intimate gig in an LA church in January 1972, the audio track was turned into the highest-selling gospel album of all time. However, most people were unaware that the performance had been filmed too. That footage was mishandled by director Sydney Pollack, then mothballed. Enter music producer Alan Elliott, who has spent 30 years magicking it into a spectacular music doc, ‘Amazing Grace’. He shares its incredible story.

1 Why has it taken so long to make this film? ‘Sydney [Pollack] used an inexperienced crew to film [the gig] and it was a bit of a mess. When I found out about the footage in 1990, I knew I had to fix it but there’s been a lot of obstacles: I had to remortgage my house, then

2 What is it that makes this gig so special? ‘Aretha’s energy is like this tsunami and it feels like the building is going to implode. The small setting gives it a unique intimacy too. I watched Beyoncé’s “Homecoming” and she could fit ten of those churches on that stage.’

3 What do you think is driving her on stage? ‘She’s aware Diana Ross and Barbra Streisand are also making films, and she knows she has to nail this performance [to remind people who the Queen of Soul is]. Remember, there’s so much footage of The Beatles and other white musical acts, but this footage of a black genius has been sitting in a storage facility for 36 years. It’s important that people finally see it.’

4 The film never leaves the church. Why not? ‘We didn’t want to do a typical talking-heads structure, but make it more of an experience. Sydney, who I worked with right up until his death in 2008, suggested we get Quincy Jones on camera in ‘Amazing Grace’ but I said no. It was always important to me that the viewer never left the church. It’s pure escapism.’

5 Do you have a favourite moment? ‘The part where Aretha’s father wipes the sweat from her brow while she’s singing really touches me. I have daughters and know that feeling. Also, when she’s singing “[I’ll Never Grow Old]”. That gained a lot of resonance when she passed away.’

We didn’t want to do a typical talking-heads structure, but make it more of an experience. Sydney, who I worked with right up until his death in 2008, suggested we get Quincy Jones on camera in ‘Amazing Grace’ but I said no. It was always important to me that the viewer never left the church. It’s pure escapism.’

It’s well intentioned, but their tentative exploration of one another’s attitudes to race, country and Nazism soon descends into melodrama. Helen O’Hara

Writer-director Amma Asante (‘Belle’) has done a remarkable job of opening up history in her films, via love stories centred on people of colour. Here, she examines the fate of Nazi Germany’s black citizens through the eyes of Amanda Stenberg’s young Rhinelander and her relationship with a Hitler Youth member (George MacKay).

It’s well intentioned, but their tentative exploration of one another’s attitudes to race, country and Nazism soon descends into melodrama. Helen O’Hara

In this talky black comedy, Keanu Reeves and Winona Ryder play a pair of misanthropes thrust together en route to a wedding. It will require all your love for the pair to hang in there as they bitch, carp and exchange jaded worldviews. It’s basically the Phil and Rita dynamic from ‘Groundhog Day’, only with two Phils and a fifth of the zingers. Phil de Semlyen Everyman Cinemas’ annual music movie fest is back. Tune your air guitar and get along to some cracking rock, soul and acid house docs, including the ace ‘Beats’.

445 Park Rd, W12 9EG

BOOK NOW
Happy birthday Dalston Superstore!

As the beloved East End LGBT+ venue turns ten, we ask some well-known regulars to share their birthday greetings.

Owen Jones
Author and columnist
“Happy birthday, Dalston Superstore, you sexy beast. With so many LGBT+ spaces vanishing across London and beyond, you are a queer gem to be treasured. And with so much of the LGBT+ scene dominated by cis white gay men (hello!), kudos for genuinely attempting to cater to our communities in all their diversity. Your staff are icons, and you are a pillar of LGBT+ nightlife in our capital. To another ten years!”

Ryan Lanji
Hungama club night promoter
“Whether it be my exhibitions or making an exhibition of myself on the dance floor, Superstore has watched me grow up, hugged me when I felt alone and become a place I’ll always call home. Happy birthday – it’s been one hell of a Hungama!”
Travis Alabanza
Performance artist
‘Happy birthday! Personally I want to thank you for always providing me with a place to chat, to meet, to go from meetings in the day to crying in the toilets at night. For the hangovers and porn star martinis, for always knowing there will be a friendly face. I’ve fallen over on your bar floor too many times, but I think it’s just a sign of a space that allows me to let go.’

Glyn Fussell
Sink The Pink
‘Superstore, you’ve changed east London! You’re a queer institution that’s given us a home, a space to create, meet likeminded people, find love and dance. I refuse to imagine a world without the colour you spread over the city and I salute your ten-year reign as the heart, soul and dance floor of east London!’

Jake Shears
Musician
‘My best memory of Dalston Superstore was coming on a Sunday afternoon after having stayed up all night with Sink The Pink’s Glyn Fussell and [promoter/musician] Bitches With Wolves. Time kind of dissolved and we must have spent eight hours there, just laughing and harassing each other. It was a memorable hang in one of the best spots in town.’

Princess Julia
DJ and East End legend
‘Is it ten years already? What a simply divine time we’ve had together and guess what? You’re better than ever! Is it true you invented the drag brunch phenomenon? And what about all that go-go dancing on the bar – from where I DJ I get a lovely view!’

Rex The Dog
DJ and producer
‘Superstore crew! Happy tenth birthday! Thank you for so many great nights in the laser pit. You were always so supportive of all our bonkers decor ideas when we did our Breed night – I still have all the Robo-Rexes. Big love to the best ‘store in town!’

Little Boots
Musician
‘Oh Dalston Superstore, I remember playing [house classic] “Love Can’t Turn Around” to a packed basement with sweat dripping from the ceiling and lasers blaring. Still one of my favourite DJ sets ever. Happy birthday and have a fab time!’

Dalston Superstore is at 117 Kingsland High St, E8 2PB. Dalston Kingsland Overground.
LEWIS CAPALDI

THURSDAY MARCH 2020

EXTRA DATE ADDED DUE TO PHENOMENAL DEMAND
FRIDAY 13 MARCH 2020

THE SSE ARENA
WEMBLEY
LONDON

TICKETS ON SALE FRIDAY 9AM

LIVENATION.CO.UK | TICKETMASTER.CO.UK
LEWISCAPALDI.COM | @LEWISCAPALDI

A LIVE NATION PRESENTATION
IN ASSOCIATION WITH CODA
WHAT’S THE DEAL WITH

Stella Donnelly

So, why should I care about this Stella?
This Welsh-Australian singer-songwriter creates psych-tinged, socially conscious indie rock that will make you laugh, cry and feel like your head is on another plane.

What’s socially conscious about it?
The lyrics, of course. Stella isn’t afraid to make her opinions known: she made her breakthrough with 2017’s ‘Boys Will Be Boys’, a song about sexual assault that dropped serendipitously as the #MeToo movement was gathering steam. And on this year’s impressive debut album, ‘Beware of the Dogs’, she tackles subjects as weighty as victim-blaming, bringing down the patriarchy and reproductive rights.

It sounds kind of heavy...
Maybe so – but someone’s gotta say it, right? And her music is far from one note – she can twist lyrics from seriously gloomy to crassly hilarious in an instant.

So seeing her live won’t leave me all miserable?
Not at all. Between songs, Stella cracks sharp, sarcastic jokes about people she’s met, the world around us and herself. Her banter won’t make you forget the messages in her music, but it will stop you leaving the venue feeling like you need a stiff drink.

Okay, I’m in. How do I get involved?
‘Beware of the Dogs’ and her debut EP ‘Thrush Metal’ – there’s that crude humour – are out now. And she plays her biggest UK headline show to date at the Scala tonight (Tuesday May 7) – it’s sure to be a stella(r) affair.

Rhian Daly

Stella Donnelly plays the Scala tonight.

Check out more new artists at timeout.com/music
GIGS AND CLUBS

What Made Geri Ginger?
Ahead of the Spice Girls’ reunion tour, Just May – who describes herself as ‘the world’s premier Geri Halliwell impersonator’ – presents a show celebrating the iconic rise of Ginger Spice. It’s safe to assume Mel B will get a cheeky mention.
→ The Glory, Haggerston Overground, Fri May 10. £6-£8.

Derrick Carter: 20 Years of Derrick Carter
The underground house pioneer is making Shoreditch’s XOYO his home every Saturday in May. This week’s instalment is a celebration of his super-influential music career.
→ XOYO. Old St. Sat May 11. £18.50.

Like a Sturgeon: Especially for EU
Think Brexit can’t get any weirder? Think again! This night of ‘anti-Brexit cabaret’ combines political lipsyncs and parodies of key players including Theresa May and Nicola Sturgeon with, um, Kylie’s greatest hits. We should all be so lucky.

Imogen Heap
Big news: the innovative Grammy-winner is playing her first London gig in more than four years.

Sam Fender
It’s a huge year for the rising star from Tyneside: he’s won the Brit Awards Critics’ Choice prize, is getting ready to drop debut album ‘Hypersonic Missiles’ in August and has just announced his biggest London headline show to date for December. By then, it should feel like a victory lap.

Zedd
The EDM banger merchant who’s collaborated with everyone from Ariana Grande (‘Break Free’) to Shawn Mendes (‘Lost in Japan’) brings his brand new live show to Canada Water superclub Printworks. Tickets go on sale at 9am on Friday (May 10), so make sure you’re ready to virtually queue.

Buy tickets at timeout.com/gigs

Buy tickets at timeout.com/gigs
In a nutshell...
A trendy and eclectic arts space from the team behind Shoreditch’s Village Underground.

Where is it?
A stroll up Stoke Newington Road from Dalston Kingsland station.

What’s the vibe?
Evolutionary Arts Hackney (or EartH to pals) is what you’d end up with if BBC Radio 6 Music opened a venue. Once an art deco cinema, the space was transformed after a crowdfunding campaign, with a tiered theatre upstairs and a cozy concert hall downstairs. In addition to gigs, stand-up shows and theatre, it hosts flea markets for all your vinyl needs.

What makes it a great venue?
The roster of events is seriously on-point. Each week sees a blend of up-and-coming artists rubbing shoulders with some of the biggest names in alternative music: Foals and Vampire Weekend have headlined the venue’s 1,000-capacity concert hall stage. And its low ceilings help make it seem like one of London’s dark basement sweatboxes.

What’s the booze situation?
As well as the usual suspects – Estrella Damm and Camden Hells – you can pick up a hoppy number from fellow N16ers Pressure Drop. That’s if you manage to move on from the surprisingly extensive aperitif and cocktail list.

What’s coming up there soon?
Scarlett Curtis is hosting a live recording of her ‘Feminists Don’t Wear Pink’ podcast here on May 20. Then rising folkie star Aldous Harding plays on May 22, and Moby’s launching his book with a Q&A on June 3. Looking further ahead, there’s a show from Islington’s fast-rising hip hop queen Little Simz on October 29, which should feel like a properly triumphant homecoming. ■ Sam Higgins
➔ 11-17 Stoke Newington Rd, N16 8BH. Dalston Kingsland Overground.

---

“Jan Lisiecki, remember the name”
The Financial Times
Jan Lisiecki performs
Ravel’s Piano Concerto in G
with Canada’s National Arts Centre Orchestra
Tuesday 14 May, 7.30pm
cadoganhall.com
TIME OUT LOVES

The Camden Roar

Dig up London’s hidden stories at the Camden People’s Theatre’s treasure trove of community-inspired fringe shows

TO CELEBRATE ITS twenty-fifth birthday, Camden People’s Theatre is turning into one giant megaphone, ready to amplify the voices of people who live in the surrounding streets and high rises. The fest is headed up by ‘Human Jam’, co-created by artistic director Brian Logan. The line-up’s seven lo-fi shows cover issues that residents care about, from young people’s frustrations to the centuries-old corpses under its streets. Here are three to get you started.

‘Human Jam’
Brian Logan ‘The trigger for this show was when they started digging up the graveyard up the road to make way for HS2. When I heard they were unearthing 60,000 bodies my jaw dropped. Suddenly, we were living 100 yards away from the biggest exhumation project in European history. We’re a local theatre so we’re perfectly placed to drill down into that.’

Shamira Turner, co-creator ‘The archaeological dig has unearthed all sorts of people who were laid to rest in the mid-1700s to early 1800s: like Thomas Craig, who died after tumbling headlong from a hot air balloon, or Bill Richmond, a former slave who became a boxing celebrity. This show is about them, but it’s also about what happens when you take away common public space. By destroying this graveyard, they’re displacing rat colonies, so residents have to keep their windows shut. We’re using a chorus of local people to dig through the layers, and find out what stories to tell.’

> Camden People’s Theatre. © Warren St. Tue May 7-May 25. £12, £10 concs.

‘High Rise Estate of Mind’
Conrad Murray, rapper and director ‘Our show is set in an alternative reality where everyone lives in a high rise. We’ve created it through beatboxing workshops with kids from a local estate. It’s come naturally to them: it’s music that comes from tension, from living in cities and being in close quarters. “Hamilton” in the West End is sick, but it’s not real hip hop – it’s a musical with hip hop elements! We’re keeping this show authentic to us: nothing’s watered down. It’s about crime, and being worried about being forced to move, and gentrification. You see the people in these funky new cafés and think: Yo, I’ve lived here my whole life, who are you? It’s good to get solidarity around the issue, because everyone’s getting hit by the housing market right now.’

> Camden People’s Theatre. © Warren St. Tue May 7-May 11. £12, £10 concs.

‘King’s Cross (Remix)’
Tom Marshman, theatremaker ‘I started making this show by having a tea party for LGBTQ+ people who lived in King’s Cross in the 1980s, and to hear their stories. HIV and AIDS came up a lot: everyone I spoke to had it or knew someone who’d had it. But people also talked about the wildness of King’s Cross back in the day, that it was kind of a little bit lawless before it got gentrified. I’ve made the show by gluing their anecdotes and memories together. A lot of them happen in the [now defunct] Bell pub. I try to recreate it in the show using theatrical magic. There’s an invitation to get in the pub, enter its world and dance.”

> Camden People’s Theatre.  1n May 21-25. £12.50-£10 concs.

By Alice Saville
Who just wants to know where they’re going to hide the bodies.

SMALL ISLAND★★★★★
The NT’s adaptation of Andrea Levy’s classic novel about Jamaica’s Windrush generation is big, slick, gripping entertainment. Following four characters – three black Jamaican, one white British – as their lives criss-cross during and after WWII, adaptor Helen Edmundson does supreme work packing a big book into a pacy three-hours-and-ten-minutes play. Rufus Norris’s spectacular production is the sort of show the huge Olivier theatre was built for.

Andrzej Lukowski
> National Theatre, Olivier.  1n Waterloo. Until Aug 10. £15-£75.

MAN OF LA MANCHA★★★★
Kelsey Grammer decks himself out in a suit of armour and a pair of vole-sized false eyebrows for this valiant but ramshackle attempt to resurrect a half-forgotten 1965 Broadway musical based on Cervantes’s ‘Don Quixote’. To paraphrase its only famous song, a mismatched celebrity cast and a by-numbers production render contemporary relevance an impossible dream.

Alice Saville

ROSMERSHOLM★★★★
‘Rosmersholm’ by Henrik Ibsen is a play that few people have heard of and even fewer can pronounce. So even with the ‘Avengers’-adjacent (and terrific) Hayley Atwell in the cast, it feels somewhat audacious of producer Sonia Friedman to just bung a production of it, cold, into the West End. But she has pretty much pulled it off. If it veers off into weird melodrama at the end, then Ibsen’s depiction of a fractured society torn between extremes of right and left feels spectacularly timely.

Andrzej Lukowski

AVALANCHE: A LOVE STORY★★★★★
A one-woman show, starring Maxine Peake, ‘Avalanche’ is an adaptation of Julia Leigh’s 2016 memoir. A gruelling account of years lost to IVF, it starts with a wry, dry tone. By the time Peake’s Leigh is going alone, through round after round of IVF, the panic level rises and ‘Avalanche’ becomes tensely gripping.

Holly Williams
> Barbican Centre.  1n Barbican. Until May 12. £16-£60.

THE HALF GOD OF RAINFALL★★★★★
An impassioned mix of Greek and Yoruba mythology, Inua Ellams’s ‘The Half God of Rainfall’ is the story of Nigerian basketball star Demi, who has supernatural powers on the court. Ellams’s exquisite writing gets to shine here. His script is a masterclass in dialogue; every word is a polished, delicious delight.

Zoe Margolis

More reviews at timeout.com/theatre
FOR ONE MIDSUMMER NIGHT ONLY.
WIN DREAM TICKETS.

As principal partner of Shakespeare’s Globe’s Summer Season 2019, Merian Global Investors is delighted to offer a draw to win one of 25 pairs of tickets for A Midsummer Night’s Dream on July 24. It promises to be a magical night.

TO ENTER, SEARCH: Merian at The Globe

Principal partner

SHAKESPEARE’S GLOBE

Merian GLOBAL INVESTORS
The art and science of investing™

Formerly Old Mutual Global Investors

Investment involves risk. The value of investments and the income from them may go down as well as up and investors may not get back the amount originally invested. This communication is issued by Merian Global Investors (UK) Limited (“Merian Global Investors”). Merian Global Investors is registered in England and Wales (number: 02949954) and is authorised and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FRN: 171164). Its registered office is at 2 Lombeth Hill, London, United Kingdom, EC4P 4WR. For full competition terms and conditions visit merianattheglobe.com. Models constructed with Geomag. MGI04/19/0109.
NEW SHOWS
THE HOTTEST THEATRE OPENINGS THIS WEEK

WEST END

Death of a Salesman
Marianne Elliott stages Arthur Miller’s play with a mega starry cast including Wendell Pierce (‘The Wire’) and Arinzé Kene.
→ Young Vic. Waterloo.
Until Jul 13. £10-£40.

Henry IV Part 1 + 2
Globe boss Michelle Terry kicks off her new season with Shakespeare’s history.

OFF-WEST END

Amour
A belated UK premiere for Michel Legrand’s gently whimsical Broadway musical.
 £22.50-£32.50.

Barely Methodical Troupe: Shift
The alt-circus stars are back with another lo-fi acrobatics show.
→ Shoreditch Town Hall. Old St, Tue May 7-May 18. £12.50-£22, £14-£20 concs.

Class
This hit play from Dublin explores learning difficulties, entitlement and social exclusion.
→ Bush Theatre. Shepherd’s Bush Market. Tue May 7-Jun 1. £20-£25, £10-£17.50 concs.

The Last Temptation of Boris Johnson
A knockabout satire by Jonathan Maitland.
→ Park Theatre. Finsbury Park. Thu May 9-Jun 8. £18.50-£32.50, £16.50-£23.50 concs.

REJOICING AT HER WONDROUS VULVA
The Young Woman Applauded Herself
Bella Heesom performs this memorably named celebration of the female anatomy.
→ Ovalhouse Theatre. Oval, Thu May 9-May 25. £12-£16, £8-£10.

Rendezvous with Marlene
German singing legend Ute Lemper’s cabaret show is inspired by her chance encounter – a three-hour phone call – with screen icon Marlene Dietrich.

LAST CHANCE

All About Eve
Gillian Anderson and Lily James play bitter rivals in Ivo van Hove’s take on the vintage backstage flick.
→ Noël Coward Theatre. Leicester Square. Until Sat May 11. £15-£175.

Follies
This stunning production of Stephen Sondheim’s melancholy musical is a love letter to theatre’s storied history.
→ National Theatre, Olivier. Waterloo. Until Sat May 11. £34-£72.

TOP SELLING

TIME OUT LONDON/STORIES

1. Come from Away
This joyful show is all warm Canadian wholesomeness.

2. Wicked
Stephen Schwartz’s witches are still working their magic.

3. Betrayal
Tom Hiddleston stars in Pinter’s menacing classic.

4. The Book of Mormon
Legendarily filthy satire from the ‘South Park’ boys.
→ Prince of Wales Theatre. Until Jul 5.

5. Waitress
A sugar-sweet musical about female friendship.

For tickets to the best shows at great prices
TIME OUT LONDON/TICKETS

EXCLUSIVE

Save 40 percent on tickets to the original, terrifying live production of ‘Ghost Stories’ with our exclusive offer. Tickets to this spook fest are just £25.20.
→ TIME OUT LONDON/TICKETS

EXCLUSIVE

‘WHITE PEARL’

See hotly tipped playwright Anchuli Felicia King’s gripping new satire for up to 48 percent off with Time Out. Tickets now from just £15.
→ TIME OUT LONDON/TICKETS

Many more theatre listings at
TIME OUT LONDON/THEATRE
SHOW OF THE WEEK

‘New Waves: Mohamed Melehi and the Casablanca Art School’

IT’S ALWAYS NICE when art comes along and rips you out of your comfort zone, drags you out of your knowledge bubble and tears you from the established canon. You get so used to your ideas about art coming from books and museums, and being so prescriptive as a result, that it can all get a little staid sometimes. But then something like this Mohamed Melehi exhibition shows up and gives you a bit of a jolt.

Melehi is a Moroccan modernist. He spent time in New York’s ’60s art scene, but went back to North Africa to help develop a new abstract language: one that would reflect his culture, and help shape it too. The result is a body of work full of curved lines and intersecting shapes, sun-drenched colours and patterned meanderings.

The bulk of the work ripples with blues and yellows and purples and pinks. In the arcing compositions you can see hints of Arabic calligraphy and shimmering heat haze. Melehi is passionately obsessed with the history of the Maghreb’s visual culture – the pendants and earrings, the rugs and clothing – and you can see its influence on everything here.

The show’s a bit of a mess, though. The rooms are too packed and screens filled with documentation.

WHAT IS IT...
Gorgeous modernist paintings from an unsung Moroccan great.

WHY GO...
They’re gorgeous, engrossing and full of symbolism.

→ The Mosaic Rooms.
Who once went to Morocco to find himself, and was VERY disappointed with the results.

By Eddy Frankel

block your view of the work – you just wish they’d let the art breathe a little.

But thankfully, the paintings and prints themselves are absolute stunners. It’s such a wonderful testament to the power of abstraction and modernism that with this simple collection of curving lines and shapes, Melehi is able to create paintings so full of references and allusions that they couldn’t be anyone’s but his, and they couldn’t be from anywhere but there. This is brilliant Moroccan modernism, and we should be damn thankful that we know that's actually a thing.

Felicity Hammond

‘SITE-SPECIFIC’ is a term that gets tossed around so much it’s lost all meaning. Felicity Hammond’s new installation, however, is genuinely worthy of that two-word descriptor.

Occupying the entire one-room space of the Arebyte Gallery, the wood-and-metal artwork presents a fractured modern cityscape, the type of wipe-clean corporate banality found in cities across the globe. In between the blocky structures are black pools, not dissimilar to the type of urban water feature that used to be at, say, the More London complex near the Mayor’s office.

The architecture pictured not only fits neatly with the gallery space and its ceiling maze of flat metallic pipes – it perfectly mirrors the built environment outside the main doors. Arebyte is part of London City Island, a blob of land the River Lea (a tributary of the Thames) squidges around like squeezed-out toothpaste. Currently partly a building site, the area is being rapidly redeveloped into ‘an exclusive island neighbourhood’. The London City Island website sells a vision of urban paradise where bobble-hatted Londoners making money in the creative industries work, rest and play in a ‘twelve-acre micro-Manhattan’.

This hasn’t always been the case. LCI used to go by the much less attractive name of ‘Bog Island’ because it often flooded. The pools of water in Hammond’s installation actually reference the Great Thames flood of 1928 when the area got submerged.

Hammond’s installation doesn’t simply criticise or satirise what’s happening around Arebyte and in London more widely. Instead, it subtly and cleverly draws your attention to just how disconcerting and weird these hyper-sterilised international Nowherevilles are. And, precisely because they’re so ultra-samey, you almost don’t notice their bacteria-like spread until you’re standing smack-up against an elite-living block of flats dribbling cold brew down your chin. Go visit, but don’t be surprised if the little red bridge across to Canning Town tube suddenly feels like a lifeline back to somewhere far less strange.

WHAT IS IT...
An immersive, water-logged attack on gentrification.

WHY GO...
It’s powerful stuff, and brilliantly presented.

By Rosemary Waugh

Find more shows to see at timeout.com/art
Four Things to See at

‘AI: More Than Human’

Art and science collide in the Barbican’s mega-ambitious new show about artificial intelligence. Here’s what to expect

1 Environmental intelligences
One of the big things that artificial intelligence can help us with is managing the decline in our poor planet’s health. The Mediated Matter Group has created a synthetic apiary, a perpetual spring environment for bees, complete with pollen and nectar substitutes and simulated daylight, while MIT’s Open Agriculture Initiative is trying to create crops in table-top-sized growing chambers. Other projects explore the future of road safety and the way AI can influence medical care.

2 Robotic animals
In the grand scheme of evolution, humans are pretty smart. Less smart are dogs and fish, so it’s obviously easier to create robo-animals than it is to create robo-humans, which goes some way towards explaining the inclusion in this show of Sony’s Aibo and MIT’s SoFi, a synthetic dog and a synthetic fish, respectively. Adorable, and you don’t have to pick up their poo or scoop them out of the tank when they die. Perfect.

3 Immersive art
A lot of this wide-ranging exhibition is comprised of contemporary artists responding to the topic of artificial intelligence. There’s Lawrence Lek’s... speculative future videogame, Kode9's sound installation about an AI version of the mythical golem from Jewish folklore, Anna Ridler's thousands of photos of tulips, and Joy Buolamwini's exploration of racial bias in facial-recognition software. But one of the main attractions will be Japanese collective teamLab's immersive installation (pictured), where your movements help shape the art itself.

Human-defeating computers

We like to measure artificial intelligences in game situations – can a computer beat a grandmaster at chess? Can it thrash an adult at, I don't know, Cluedo? As the intelligences improve, the answer has become yes a lot more often than no. The exhibition will include items and explanations of IBM's Deep Blue and Watson computers and DeepMind's AlphaGo, the first computer to beat a human at the strategy board game Go. If we find one that can play a full game of Monopoly without dying of boredom then we're in real trouble. ■ Eddy Frankel

Hito Steyerl: 'Power Plants'

Steyerl mixes nature and data to shocking effect: creating AI-powered art that makes social inequality visible and lushly beautiful at the same time.

Rachel Rossin: 'Stalking the Trace'

With a virtual reality headset strapped on your bonce, you can walk through Rossin's exhibition and control the passage of time. This is affectingly futuristic, computer-driven art.

Lawrence Lek: 'AIDOL'

This CGI-film tells the story of a future singer who is reliant on an AI songwriter. It's damn clever, totally trippy and really quite pretty.

bucket life delivered

FOOD FREEDOM
Six of the Best

Thai restaurants

Tired of your dismal high street Thai? Don’t stress: these are the places worth crossing the capital for

Begging Bowl
Small sharing plates are the name of the game at this colourful Peckham favourite, where the focus is on lesser seen street foods: a stir-fry of yam beans and king oyster mushrooms, say (that’s vegan and gluten-free, too). Seasonal Western ingredients are also given the Thai treatment: think guinea fowl with broad beans, papaya and ginger.

→ 168 Bellenden Rd, SE15 4BW. Peckham Rye Overground.

Kin + Deum
As a modern Thai restaurant, Kin + Deum is the full shebang: a laidback, minimalist space serving up big helpings of thrilling, Bangkok-inspired food with the help of some genuinely lovely staff. Our top picks? The red rice curry salad, the soft aubergine with a tangy tamarind dip, a pitch-perfect som tam salad and the eye-wateringly fiery pad spaghetti prawn kee mao.

→ 2 Crucifix Lane, SE1 3JW. London Bridge.

Singburi
A veteran of the Leytonstone scene (and still something of a local secret), this tiny family-run café scores in every department. The BYO policy is one draw, but the food is also a blast – staunchly traditional, potently spiced and delivered without ceremony from the open kitchen. Prices are fair, service is matter-of-fact and the place is ramantly popular – despite the hassle of booking over the phone.

→ 593 High Rd, E11 4PJ. Leytonstone High Rd Overground.

Smoking Goat
The brazen Shoreditch reincarnation of the original dive bar-esque Denmark Street space provides smack-in-the-face Thai barbecue in a jam-packed industrial-meets-rustic setting, all smoke, loud music and high-strength alcohol. The food is laced with volcanically hot ‘mouse-dropping’ chillies, and the flavours will hit you for six. Be sure to order the lardo-fried rice and the signature fish-sauce chicken wings, both of which are serious crowd-pleasers. Best news? Your wallet won’t be seriously dented, even if you go heavy on the booze. This is really drinking food at its absolute best.

→ 64 Shoreditch High St, E1 6JJ. Shoreditch High St Overground.

Som Saa
With full-frontal, never-dumbed-down flavours from Thailand’s north-eastern provinces, the cooking at Som Saa is guaranteed to blow you away. Beyond its terrific curries, unforgettable dishes include the stunning deep-fried sea bass with isaan herbs, which comes with both its head and tail on, though save space for the knock-out puddings, like silky palm-sugar ice cream (think burnt toffee and salt), served with grilled turmeric-tinged banana. Bookings are limited to groups, but a reservation may get you one of the side cabanas: these are the best seats in the house.

→ 43a Commercial St, E1 6BD. Aldgate East.

---

Exclusive: Enjoy bottomless dim sum and a glass of prosecco at Hampstead Chinese restaurant Goldfish. All for just £19.50.

→ TIMEOUT.COM/GOLDFISH2019
CookDaily

Arch 358, Westgate St, E8 3RN. London Fields Overground.

Having built a cult following at the original Boxpark site, charismatic plant-food champion King Senathit (aka ‘King Cook’) has migrated further east to this larger space. The location couldn’t be cooler: a short hop from Mare Street Market in one direction and Netil Market in the other. Then there’s the setting: under a railway arch, with concrete floors, an arcade machine in the corner and more tables on fake grass outside.

It’s essentially a trendy canteen: you order and pay at the counter, then collect your food on a tray when your number’s called. If you’re lucky, you might catch a glimpse of the king himself, bustling in the small semi-open kitchen.

The food itself – a line-up of globe-trotting bowls for £8.50 (plus toppings), served on big beds of carbs – was satisfying, rather than stellar. Our best dish was the ‘noodle bowl’, a stir-fry of udon noodles and green veg that was both sweet and fiery. But ‘da infamous’ – the Thai-style curry on which KC’s rep was built – was ordinary. It was packed with veg, which we loved, but the coconut milk sauce lacked depth and fragrance. Toppings are extra: it’s worth stumpung up a quid for the gnarled ‘fake chicken’ (soy and wheat protein).

CookDaily isn’t quite a destination, but for a satisfying vegan lunch? Sure.

Wait for sweet but fiery udon noodle stir-fry. Go ahead and add the gnarled fake chicken, for a quid.

What is it...
A larger, eat-in site for the vegan cult hit.

Why go...
For sweet but fiery udon noodle stir-fry. Go ahead and add the gnarled fake chicken, for a quid.

Dinner by Heston Blumenthal

Fo

Food

SO YOU’VE NEVER BEEN TO

What is it...
A larger, eat-in site for the vegan cult hit.

Why go...
For sweet but fiery udon noodle stir-fry. Go ahead and add the gnarled fake chicken, for a quid.

Wait. Isn’t this the place with the Meat Fruit?
Spot on. It’s the London outpost of culinary wizard Heston Blumenthal’s empire, and has a focus on recreating heritage dishes from days of yore.

What’s the vibe?
Given the heritage focus, surprisingly modern. Occupying what was once two separate restaurants within the Mandarin Oriental, it’s a huge, expensively decorated space with a masculine, minimalisit look, all coffee, cream and backlit pelmets. Service is just fabulous: gracious, charismatic and super-savvy.

How about the food?
Outstanding. Of course, there’s that signature Meat Fruit (above), made to a recipe dating back to 1500. A silky chicken liver parfait in a firm mandarin jelly, plus a real leaf poking out of the top (don’t eat that). But everything here is flawless, from saffron and almond rice with veal sweetbreads, which dates back to 1390, to spiced squab pigeon with artichokes, ale and malt.

But?
The bill will be brutal. At Dinner, the starters cost more than £20, mains over £40 and so on. But there’s lots of good (free) bread, and the terrific triple-cooked chips are ‘only’ £6, so share where you can, or hold back on booze (from £36 a bottle) to soften the blow. A bit.

Any other tips?
The dark interiors and special-occasion price tag are best suited to dinner, but if you must go for lunch, then ask for a table by the window, looking on to the park.

Tania Ballantine

Lunch for two with soft drinks (no service): around £25.

EXCLUSIVE

BELGO

Want more moules for your moolah? Save 49 percent on moules-frites and a drink at one of four Belgo restaurants. Now just £10.

TIMEOUT.COM/BELGO2019

Belgo

Want more moules for your moolah? Save 49 percent on moules-frites and a drink at one of four Belgo restaurants. Now just £10.

TIMEOUT.COM/BELGO2019

What is it...
A larger, eat-in site for the vegan cult hit.

Why go...
For sweet but fiery udon noodle stir-fry. Go ahead and add the gnarled fake chicken, for a quid.

Wait. Isn’t this the place with the Meat Fruit?
Spot on. It’s the London outpost of culinary wizard Heston Blumenthal’s empire, and has a focus on recreating heritage dishes from days of yore.

What’s the vibe?
Given the heritage focus, surprisingly modern. Occupying what was once two separate restaurants within the Mandarin Oriental, it’s a huge, expensively decorated space with a masculine, minimalisit look, all coffee, cream and backlit pelmets. Service is just fabulous: gracious, charismatic and super-savvy.

How about the food?
Outstanding. Of course, there’s that signature Meat Fruit (above), made to a recipe dating back to 1500. A silky chicken liver parfait in a firm mandarin jelly, plus a real leaf poking out of the top (don’t eat that). But everything here is flawless, from saffron and almond rice with veal sweetbreads, which dates back to 1390, to spiced squab pigeon with artichokes, ale and malt.

But?
The bill will be brutal. At Dinner, the starters cost more than £20, mains over £40 and so on. But there’s lots of good (free) bread, and the terrific triple-cooked chips are ‘only’ £6, so share where you can, or hold back on booze (from £36 a bottle) to soften the blow. A bit.

Any other tips?
The dark interiors and special-occasion price tag are best suited to dinner, but if you must go for lunch, then ask for a table by the window, looking on to the park.

Tania Ballantine

Dinner for two with drinks and service: around £250.

TIMEOUT.COM/BELGO2019

EXCLUSIVE

BELGO

Want more moules for your moolah? Save 49 percent on moules-frites and a drink at one of four Belgo restaurants. Now just £10.

TIMEOUT.COM/BELGO2019

What is it...
A larger, eat-in site for the vegan cult hit.

Why go...
For sweet but fiery udon noodle stir-fry. Go ahead and add the gnarled fake chicken, for a quid.

Wait. Isn’t this the place with the Meat Fruit?
Spot on. It’s the London outpost of culinary wizard Heston Blumenthal’s empire, and has a focus on recreating heritage dishes from days of yore.

What’s the vibe?
Given the heritage focus, surprisingly modern. Occupying what was once two separate restaurants within the Mandarin Oriental, it’s a huge, expensively decorated space with a masculine, minimalisit look, all coffee, cream and backlit pelmets. Service is just fabulous: gracious, charismatic and super-savvy.

How about the food?
Outstanding. Of course, there’s that signature Meat Fruit (above), made to a recipe dating back to 1500. A silky chicken liver parfait in a firm mandarin jelly, plus a real leaf poking out of the top (don’t eat that). But everything here is flawless, from saffron and almond rice with veal sweetbreads, which dates back to 1390, to spiced squab pigeon with artichokes, ale and malt.

But?
The bill will be brutal. At Dinner, the starters cost more than £20, mains over £40 and so on. But there’s lots of good (free) bread, and the terrific triple-cooked chips are ‘only’ £6, so share where you can, or hold back on booze (from £36 a bottle) to soften the blow. A bit.

Any other tips?
The dark interiors and special-occasion price tag are best suited to dinner, but if you must go for lunch, then ask for a table by the window, looking on to the park.

Tania Ballantine

Dinner for two with drinks and service: around £250.

TIMEOUT.COM/BELGO2019

EXCLUSIVE

BELGO

Want more moules for your moolah? Save 49 percent on moules-frites and a drink at one of four Belgo restaurants. Now just £10.

TIMEOUT.COM/BELGO2019

What is it...
A larger, eat-in site for the vegan cult hit.

Why go...
For sweet but fiery udon noodle stir-fry. Go ahead and add the gnarled fake chicken, for a quid.

Wait. Isn’t this the place with the Meat Fruit?
Spot on. It’s the London outpost of culinary wizard Heston Blumenthal’s empire, and has a focus on recreating heritage dishes from days of yore.

What’s the vibe?
Given the heritage focus, surprisingly modern. Occupying what was once two separate restaurants within the Mandarin Oriental, it’s a huge, expensively decorated space with a masculine, minimalisit look, all coffee, cream and backlit pelmets. Service is just fabulous: gracious, charismatic and super-savvy.

How about the food?
Outstanding. Of course, there’s that signature Meat Fruit (above), made to a recipe dating back to 1500. A silky chicken liver parfait in a firm mandarin jelly, plus a real leaf poking out of the top (don’t eat that). But everything here is flawless, from saffron and almond rice with veal sweetbreads, which dates back to 1390, to spiced squab pigeon with artichokes, ale and malt.

But?
The bill will be brutal. At Dinner, the starters cost more than £20, mains over £40 and so on. But there’s lots of good (free) bread, and the terrific triple-cooked chips are ‘only’ £6, so share where you can, or hold back on booze (from £36 a bottle) to soften the blow. A bit.

Any other tips?
The dark interiors and special-occasion price tag are best suited to dinner, but if you must go for lunch, then ask for a table by the window, looking on to the park.

Tania Ballantine

Dinner for two with drinks and service: around £250.

TIMEOUT.COM/BELGO2019
Heads + Tails

175 West End Lane, NW6 2LH. ☛ West Hampstead.

A BAR TENDER WAS wearing a tropical shirt and sailor hat in Heads + Tails, despite it only being a Wednesday night. It seems the party has arrived in West Hampstead, as this spot was busy with punters of all ages who were putting to bed any persistent rumours that this is a sleepy part of town. The bar gets its name from its two clear concepts – the upstairs (Heads) is a light space serving low-alcohol drinks, and the basement (Tails) is a barely lit spot for alcohol drinks, and the basement.

While the idea isn’t totally original (just look at bar Swift in the West End), the execution means this spot just opposite the tube is surprisingly gorgeous. Particularly upstairs, where furnishing includes gold-trimmed, marble-effect surfaces, turquoise seating and verdant greenery spilling from pots and planters. Plus, there’s a pretty decked garden out the back to suit those daytime-friendly drinks.

A sweet Italian bartender made us feel at home at the bar in Heads, answering our questions in detail, giving thoughtful suggestions and letting me order from the downstairs menu when I was in need of something stronger. But despite my predilection for a drink containing something stronger. But despite my anything for taking my pregnant friend bar-reviewing. Her drinks were some of the best. The Everlong was an effervescent joy made from alcohol-free aperitif Everleaf, mixed with elderflower cordial and lemon tonic. And a Pink Lemonade had just a whisper of rosé vermouth but felt like a full-on cocktail treat.

There’s something for everyone: Heads or Tails, clear-headed or full sailor hat. ■ Laura Richards

The Canbury Arms

May ushers in Aussie craft beer, groundbreaking cocktails and a good, old-fashioned East End boozier

WHAT IS IT...
A Kingston pub gets a revamp from Pearmain Pubs.

WHY GO...
A stellar beer line-up makes this another booming boozzer for the borough.

49 Canbury Park Rd, KT2 6LQ, Kingston rail.

The Buxton

From the team behind popular boozers The Culpeper comes this East London ‘pub with rooms’. Annoyingly, the rooftop bar is reserved for hotel guests. But the ground floor is set to be a proper pub for all, championing the best local drinks.

Tayér + Elementary
Alex Kratena – the former head bartender at Artesian – will launch his first bar with partner Monica Berg. Expect cocktails on tap at Elementary and the most progressive drink-making taking place at Tayér.

Little Creatures Regent’s Canal
Granary Square continues to boom. The latest launch is from Aussie brewery Little Creatures, bringing a tap room and microbrewery to the ‘hood, along with its famed Fremantle beers. Strewth!

The Park Brewery
Balloons & Oyster

More low- and no-alcohol spots at timeout.com/bars

Dave Faulkner
Escapes

Edited by Ellie Walker-Arnott timeout.com/daytrips

A perfect day in

Cambridge

Dinky wine bars, honey-coloured colleges and loads of bikes

IF CAMBRIDGE WERE a person, they’d be worldly, spirited and always ready to hop on a bike. Far more than just a prestigious, world-famous university, the city (Cambridge is small but it’s been a city since 1951) is packed with everything from pop-up food markets to old-time pubs. Sitting on the River Cam and with a walkable, vibrant and quite frankly gorgeous centre, this city is as charming as they come.

First up
Get your bearings with a bird’s eye view of the city. Make your way to Great St Mary’s Church. One short climb up a steep and windy staircase later and you’ll be at the top of a tower with views over Cambridge’s pretty spires.

Soak up the vibes
You can’t visit Cambridge without peeking into the colleges, with their perfectly mowed lawns and grand libraries. King’s College is the most famous, but Corpus Christi and St Catharine’s are just as stunning. Extra Cambridge points if you rent a bike and explore on two wheels.

Stop for lunch
Grab a bite to eat at Market Square. It’s like an outdoor version of Greenwich Market minus the crowds. Or eat at local fave the Old Bicycle Shop. It used to be – you guessed it – a shop selling bikes. It dates back to the 1800s and Charles Darwin is rumoured to have once bought a bike from there.

Get a culture fix
Cambridge Arts Theatre is a total gem that welcomes new shows each week, while the Fitzwilliam Museum, home to art and antiquities, gives the British Museum a run for its money. Don’t miss Kettle’s Yard, an art gallery and the former home of Jim Ede, a curator at Tate.

Drink like a local
Cambridge Wine Merchants is part shop, part bar, with floor-to-ceiling shelves stuffed with bottles of vino from all over the world. Fancy a pint? Seventeenth-century pub The Eagle is doused in history. It’s where Watson and Crick announced their findings on DNA, and has graffiti by WWII airmen on the walls and ceiling.

IF YOU ONLY DO ONE THING
Pack a picnic, pick up a punt from Scudamore’s and glide down the River Cam to Grantchester Meadows via the backs of the colleges. Got there in one piece? Enjoy your alfresco nibbles among the greenery. Don’t turn your nose up at punting just because it’s an obvious Cambridge pursuit – it really is lovely.

Glide into the weekend at timeout.com/daytrips

Time Out London May 7 – 13 2019
TENZING Natural Energy is inspired by Sherpa Tenzing – one of the first two men to summit Mt. Everest. When we heard about the natural, energising brews Sherpas use on high altitude expeditions, we travelled to meet the family of Sherpa Tenzing to find out more. With their help, we created our drink: a plant-based triple hit of natural caffeine, electrolytes and vitamin C.

Today, we are a team of 14 that are taking on an Everest of our own: launching a plant-based alternative in a market dominated by some pretty big dogs. It’s certainly not going to be easy, but that’s the exciting part! If you’re up for an adventure too, keep an eye out for our upcoming environmental projects or even join our team.

FIND OUT MORE AT

TENZINGNATURALENERGY.COM

PURELY FROM PLANTS. NICE.
NATURAL ENERGY
PURELY FROM PLANTS. NICE.

WHAT MAKES TENZING DIFFERENT

Natural Caffeine & L-Theanine from Green Coffee, Guarana & Green Tea.

Electrolytes
from Himalayan Rock Salt.

Vitamin C
from Lemons & Indian Gooseberries.

48 calories per can.

Rainforest Alliance Certified™
As part of our unique blend, we are proud to source our green tea from Rainforest Alliance Certified™ farms. 5% of our profits also fund environmental projects.

Inspired by Sherpa Tenzing and the energising brews Himalayan Sherpas use on their high altitude expeditions.
TENZINGNATURALENERGY.COM